PRINCESS LEARNS TANGO BY QUEEN MARY'S LEAVE

Craze for Dance in England Causes Teachers to Visit Savages for New Steps.

LONDON, Nov. 1.—When the tango and turkey trot first reached the metropolis, British matrons were shocked, but in spite of their disapproval, London and, indeed, all England, is now "tango mad." Tango teas are being given, not only at the principal hotels, but even the theaters are opened for tango dances in the afternoon.

It is even whispered that Queen Mary, having been assured by Canon Edgar Sheppard that there is positively no cause for the slightest twinge of conscience in permitting the tango, has consented that Princess Mary be taught.

Professional dancing couples have been sent to semi-barbarous countries to pick up new terpsichorean sensations. Reports have reached London of some very effective dances performed by the Javanese in which women participate with men, which is unusual in savage countries.

NO SEX HYGIENE IN SCHOOLS, SAYS BLEWETT

New Instruction to Be on Importance of Keeping Clean and Taking Exercise.

Supt. of Schools Blewett was kept busy Saturday answering questons about a course in "sex hygiene," which, according to an item published in a morning newspaper, he had announced as a future part of the public school curriculum. Instruction in this subject, he was quoted as saying, will be given once a week, in the form of "nature study lessons."

Parents telephoned to learn whether the new instruction would be obligatory. Teachers speculated on the manner of instruction in subjects not included in their studies at the normal school.

But the superintendent explained it is simply hygiene which is to be the theme of instruction. Children are to be told the importance of keeping clean, of changing their clothing often, of brushing their teeth twice a day and of taking open-air exercise.

"As for sex hygiene," said Blewett "I am opposed to the teaching of any such subject to children by school teachers."

The simian was terribly frightened and screamed and trembled throughout the journey. When he alighted he was paralyzed by fear.

TROOPS GREETED AS FRIENDS BY MINE STRIKERS

RIFLES ARE SURRENDERED

Lawson, Labor Chief, in Conference With Commandant of Cavalry and Artillery at Trinidad.

TRINIDAD, Colo., Nov. 1.—Fifteen hundred men, women and children of the Ludlow Tent Colony, singing "Marching Through Georgia," marched one mile south of the tents today to meet Adjutant-General John Chase, in command of two troops of cavalry and a platoon of artillery.

"You come to us in peace and we greet you as friends," said John R. Lawson of the United Mine Workers of America, who marched at the head of the procession, to Gen. Chase.

Many of the men carried picks and the women and children bore American flags. The entire company turned about and moved in the direction of Ludlow Station to await the arrival of the infantry from Trinidad and Walsenburg.

The infantry from Trinidad detrained at 11:10 and received a demonstration similar to that accorded Gen. Chase. The soldiers marched between solid lines of strikers, on either side of the road, to the tent colony, where Gen. Chase entered into a conference with Lawson regarding the manner in which the arms are to be collected. Eleven rifles had been turned over to the troops at noon.

MARRIAGE LICENSE TO GIRL REPORTED MISSING

Mother Reports Miss Emma Ruch Disappeared — Fiance Luckier Than Police in Search.

The police did not have as much luck in finding Miss Emma Marie Ruch, 17 years old, of 1817 Lynch street, who was reported missing from her home, as did James H. Wells of 1137 Rutger street.

The mother of Miss Ruch reported excitedly Friday that her daughter had not returned home from her work at a shoe factory. Wells and the young woman Friday appeared at the marriage license office in the city hall and asked for a marriage license. It was issued and the couple departed, saying they would be married right away.

The mother Saturday told reporters her daughter is not missing now and she did not want anything more said about it. She said her daughter had been married and is at home.

TROOPS ASKED AFTER "FEUD CAPITAL" FIRE

Jackson, Ky., Is Flame Swept and Loss Is Estimated at $150,000.

JACKSON, Ky., Nov. 1.—Practically the whole business section of Jackson, the scene of many feud killings, was been destroyed by fire. Two blocks of buildings were burned, including the Postoffice, Thompson Hotel, two churches and a score of residences.

The loss is estimated at $150,000. A telegram has been sent to Gov. McCreary, asking him to call out the Jackson company of militia to protect property.

The fire broke out about 8 o'clock last night and raged practically all night.

The greater number of the buildings were frame and offered little resistance. In most cases the contents of the building were destroyed.

While all of the guests escaped from the hotel, many of them lost all of their belongings.

REDFIELD HERE, WARNS AGAINST PROPHETS OF EVIL

Secretary of Commerce Says Pay No Attention to the Tariff Calamity Howlers.

REPORTS BUSINESS GOOD

Wilson Cabinet Member to Address Commercial Club Members on 'Ideals of Commerce.'

The particular message which Secretary of Commerce William C. Redfield of President Wilson's cabinet, who is in St. Louis, requested the Post-Dispatch to deliver to the people of St Louis Saturday, was:

"Pay no attention to the prophets of evil!"

"The prophets of evil," the Secretary explained, are the calamity howlers who have predicted that widespread industrial disaster would result from the enactment of the new tariff law. Secretary Redfield said that in his tour of the country he had found splendid commercial conditions, with every indication that the country would continue prosperous.

Secretary Redfield came to St. Louis to speak before the Commercial Club at the St. Louis Club Saturday night, on the "Ideals of Commerce." He was met at Union Station by Tom Randolph president of the National Bank of Commerce, and John F. Shepley, president of the Commercial Club. He went to Randolph's home at 7 Kingsbury place for breakfast.

Meets Former Secretary.

At 11 o'clock he had an interview with former Secretary of Commerce and Labor Nagel and later went to the Country Club with Shepley for luncheon. He was scheduled to spend the afternoon at Randolph's home, resting for his speech before the Commercial Club. He will spend Sunday in St. Louis and will attend church at St. John's Methodist Church, King's highway and Washington boulevard.

Secretary Redfield said that the new tariff law was responsible for putting the price of some things somewhere, but not all things everywhere.

No one could tell the exact time, he said, when the tariff reductions made by the Underwood-Simmons bill would affect the cost of living. There would have to be a gradual adjustment, he said. The price of woolen goods already had been reduced 25 cents a yard, he said, but the consumer likely would not get immediate benefits, because the merchants bought their stocks now on sale before the price reduction went into effect.

Reduction by the Tariff.

"A chemical manufacturer in Colorado told me that his chemicals were already costing him $1000 a car less than they were under the old tariff law," said Secretary Redfield.

The Secretary said he did not care to discuss any plan for the investigation of corporations that reduce wages on account of the tariff law. He said that his views had been so grossly misrepresented on this subject that no good could result from further discussion. He never had proposed to investigate the individual manufacturer, he said, although reports of his statement published several months ago indicated that such was his intention.

"I have not heard of a single corporation," he said, "that has made a wage reduction since the tariff law went into effect."

The Commercial Club has invited many guests to hear Secretary Redfield's address. The Secretary will leave St. Louis Sunday night for Washington.

DENVER, Colo., Nov. 1.—Judge Ben B. Lindsey has been exonerated by a committee appointed six weeks ago when the Taxpayers' Association decided to probe the record of the Juvenile Judge and his court.

Washington Tradesmen Learn That Wedding Purchases Were Not Completed in Summer.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1.—Mrs. Woodrow Wilson and her daughter, Miss Jessie Wilson, whose marriage to Francis Boyes Sayre is announced for Nov. 25, are familiar figures in the shopping district of the capital these days.

When the President's family returned from the summer home it was intimated that the trousseau shopping had been completed in New York, but Washington tradesmen can testify differently.

Many gifts for the trousseau have been sent to Miss Wilson, among them being several pieces of hand-embroidered lingerie from Mrs. Marshall, the wife of the Vice-President, and other pieces equally as dainty, from Cabinet hostesses, and from many of the girls with whom and for whom Miss Jessie Wilson labored in settlement work.

President Wilson has told acquaintances that he knows mighty little about the arrangements for the wedding but he thinks Sayre is a mighty fine chap.

He declares that no man is quite good enough for one of his girls, but to Sayre, who is connected with the District Attorney's office in New York, he sees no actual objection.

Miss Wilson is of medium size, with regular features and has pale-gold braids of hair. She is especially partial to violet and nearly all her gowns and hats are of that shade. Sometimes she wears gray and white, but seldom has been known to wear any other color.

Miss Wilson is fond of horseback riding and sits her horse well. She has adopted the cross saddle and takes the hurdles as well as any man. She also plays a good game of tennis and golf, although she does not go in as much for athletics as her younger sister, Eleanor.

Like her sister, Miss Wilson is a remarkable linguist and can speak French and German with the facility of a native. She plays the piano remarkably well and has some literary ability.

She has written a number of articles on her pet subject—the betterment of girls. She also has written some hymns, which were sung at the Young Women's Christian Association convention recently. She also is a clever public speaker, because she is earnest and has a charming address.

In spite of the fact that Miss Wilson is interested in the more serious things in life, she has a sharp sense of humor and ready wit. She delights in telling a number of experiences she and her sisters have had since entering the White House—a number of them at their expense.

One of these was an occurence at a dance shortly after the inauguration, when a woman directly behind them said so audibly they could hear:

"say, those Wilson girls aren't so bad looking after all!"

$500 FINE FOR LITTLE MAN WHO KILLED BIG ONE

Arthur Freund Who Stabbed 2 Men Is Convicted of Manslaughter.

A jury in Judge Henning's court Friday night decided that a $500 fine was punishment enough for a little man who had gotten into a fight with several big men and used a knife to such effect that one of the big men later died from injuries he received. The little man, Arthur Freund, was found guilty of manslaughter in the fourth degree, although he had been charged with murder in the second degree.

The fight was in a saloon at Broadway and Dorcas street the night of March 15. The man who was killed was John Doran Jr. of 3835 McDonald avenue.

Witnesses for the State and defense differed at the trial as to the relative size of Freund and Doran. Freund is 5 feet 7 in height and is rather slight. Against the difference in weight of the men, the prosecution showed that Doran did not have good use of one arm because of a slight paralysis.

The case had been on trial for two days and the jury retired at noon Friday. The Court's instructions were that a verdict of murder in the second degree, manslaughter or acquittal on the ground of self-defense, might be returned. Charles P. Johnson, the defendant's counsel, pleaded that his client was justified in killing Doran in his own defense.

The testimony showed that Freund and two friends, Joseph Gerhard and John Hartman, entered the saloon together. At the bar drinking were John Doran, his brother Frank, and John Weber.

Freund, according to the testimony, glanced at Weber, who resented the attention, saying:

"What is that little guy looking at me for?"

Hartman, believing that Weber was about to strike Freund, remarked to Weber:

"If you hit him you'll have to hit me."

Thereupon, according to testimony, Weber knocked Hartman down. There was a general scrimmage, the men ran to the door of the saloon, and both John and Frank Doran were stabbed. John Doran's wound was in his stomach. He was carried back into the saloon and died a few minutes later.

Freund admitted that he used the knife, but said that he did so to defend himself. He said he never had been in the saloon before, that he had heard the other men quarreling among themselves, and that the Dorans attacked him.

INDIANAPOLIS CAR SERVICE STOPPED BY STRIKE RIOTS

Traction Owners Say They Will Resume When Breakers Arrive From Chicago.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Nov. 1.—After a morning of rioting, the street car company practically gave up efforts to operate cars at noon today. It was stated that an attempt to establish service would be made this afternoon when 500 strike-breakers were expected to arrive from Chicago.

The strike, which was started at 11 o'clock last night, was marked by continual rioting in the downtown district this morning. Motormen and conductors were dragged from their cars and taken to the union headquarters and registered, trolleys were broken, trolley poles pulled off and the air which controlled the brakes released from the containers under the cars.

There were several hundred strikers and sympathizers in the crowd and a number of boys aided their efforts to tie up the street car service. The police were unable to hold the crowd in check as it moved from one corner to another in the downtown district.

A repair truck sent out to fix the broken trolley wires was dragged away as soon as the wire was pulled up off the street so that it would not endanger the pedestrians. The repair crew finally gave up the attempt and returned to the barn.

Merchants said business was at a standstill and for all the trade they had they might as well close their stores. The police expect more serious trouble this afternoon if the cars are manned by professional strike-breakers.

The interurban service was normal except for delays in getting in and out of the city.

SEATTLE, Wash., Nov. 1.—The Finance Committee of the City Council has decided to introduce an emergency appropriation bill for $1600 at the Council meeting Monday to employ additional rat catchers and trappers to aid the present force in the war on rats along the water front resulting from the finding of rats infested with bubonic plague germs.

Health Commissioner James E. Crichter told the committee 16 plague-infected rats have been caught this month.

An injunction to restrain railroads from abolishing t Tower Grove grade crossir ing the streets 14 feet and d railroad tracks an equal asked of the Circuit Court former City Counselor Lam ther, attorney for the La Co., 1545 Tower Grove ave

Judge Daniel D. Fisher respondents, the city, the Mis- cific and the Frisco railroads, to appear next Friday and show cause why a temporary restraining order should not be issued. Walther in his petition not only alleges that no provision for compensation to his client has been made, but attacks the validity of the ordinance on the ground that 10 days' notice of intent to change the street grades was not printed in daily newspapers before the ordinance was enacted. The petition describes the property as realty valued at $30,000 and factory equipment valued at $20,000. It is said the damages are estimated by the Landau company at about $75,000.

City Counselor Baird does not believe the injunction suit will force the abandonment of the present plan of grade separation, and Mayor Kiel will proceed to turn the first spade of earth at 2:30 p. m., Saturday, in the presence of South Side citizens, city officials and railroad executives.

President H. F. Ruan of the Missouri Pacific Railway is scheduled to make a speech at the opening ceremonies. Other speakers will assist in a program arranged by the Tower Grove Heights Improvement Association and affiliated organizations. When Mayor Kiel removes the first earth, a brass band will assist the steam whistles and bells of the vicinity in celebrating the final commencement of a long projected improvement, once before directed by the Municipal Assembly and stopped by order of the Missouri Supreme Court.

Settlement Is Possible.

The Landau Cabinet Co., through Walther, has negotiated with City Counselor Baird and President Kinsey of the Board of Public Improvements to arrange for the payment of damages estimated at $75,000 incident to the change of grade in Tower Grove and Vandeventer avenues, on which its plant has frontage. By asking the court to appoint commissioners to appraise the damages, the city may, with the consent of the plaintiff, proceed with the construction of viaducts.

A similar course was pursued in the case of the Compton avenue viaduct two years ago, when a property owner asked an injunction. He was compensated at the expense of the railroads, under an agreement in the ordinance that the roads would bear consequential damages arising at that end of the viaduct.

The elaborate celebration planned for Saturday was to mark the end of a 15-year fight to have the Tower Grove crossing, probably the most dangerous in the city, abolished.

Numerous plans have been promulgated, ranging from a subway thoroughfare to a track depression of 24 feet. In 1909 Mayor Rolla Wells signed a bill fostered by the Real Estate Exchange and drafted by Frank H. Gerhart depressing the tracks of the Frisco and Missouri Pacific to permit a 12-foot headroom under the present grade of Tower Grove avenue.

Railroads Fought Ordinance.

The railroads fought this ordinance to the Missouri Supreme Court, where it was declared unreasonable and void. The railroads asserted that it would cost them $2,000,000 to separate grades by this plan, and would make it impossible to furnish track facilities to neighboring industries such as the American Car Co. and the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. The injunction was asked in the name of the American Car Co., but counsel for the interested railroads assisted in prosecuting the suit.

Lambert E. Walther, at the time City Counselor, defended the city. When the Gerhart ordinance was nullified by the Supreme Court, a bill providing that Tower Grove and Vandeventer avenues should be elevated 14 feet, and the railroad tracks depressed the same distance, was enacted. The bill provides that all damages resulting from the change in street grades shall fall upon the city, and all damages incident to the change in track grades shall fall upon the railroads.

Otherwise it ould go into the treasury of the United tates, even if his income was not subject to the tax.

Problems Are Solved.

According to Chief Clerk E. F. Daly of the Internal Revenue office at St. Louis, the regulations issued by the Government are very clear, and have solved practically all of the problems which had been puzzling bankers and their lawyers.

Every corporation or individual withholding an income tax must report to the Collector of Internal Revenue the name of the persons whose tax was withheld, together with the amount.

The operation of the law will make it practically impossible for any taxable person to escape, in the opinion of the revenue officials. One of the hypothetical questions put up to the department was this: Suppose an individual owns bonds in three different railroad corporations and the interest is to be paid to him through three different trust companies. Although the amount of interest due him through each trust company is less than $3000, the aggregate is more than $3000, would each trust company be required to withhold the income tax?

Rent Collection Rolls.

The ruling of the department is that each company must collect the tax and report to the Internal Revenue Collector, who will himself allow proper exemptions, and return excess payments to the individual. As this ruling makes it necessary to collect the tax on all interest or coupon payments, unless exemption has been claimed, it will make it practically impossible for any person to evade the law.

A telegram received at the local office Saturday stated that regulations regarding the collection of the tax on rents, salaries and wages had been sent by special delivery. The regulations will not reach St. Louis until Sunday, but will then be distributed.

It appears now that the tenant renting or leasing a house, apartment or flat would be authorized to withhold the income tax unless the landlord filed with the tenant a statement claiming exemption. Failure to so withhold the tax would render the tenant liable to its payment to the Government.

Dividends and Corporations.

Individuals having incomes of less than $3000, if not married, and $4000, if married, are not required to make returns to the Internal Revenue Collector, or to their employers.

Dividends from stock in corporations are not subject to the income tax law, for the reason that the corporaion itself must pay an income tax. To tax the corporation and again the income of the shareholder, would be double taxation, and this the framers of the law attempted to avoid.

All corporations, under the income tax law, will be subject to the tax. Under the old law, which had been in force for several years, corporations were allowed an exemption of $5000. The new law wipes out the exemption. There are 8000 corporations in the St. Louis district, and all will have to pay the tax. Under the old law they paid annually $600,000 into the treasury of the United States, but under the new law the amount will be about twice that sum.

Corporations owning interest-bearing bonds or other securities subject to the income tax, or income-bearing real estate, escape the inconvenience of having their income tax withheld at its source. As all corporations are required to make returns, and as the revenue inspectors have authority to examine books to determine the accuracy of the statements, it was not considered necessary by the makers of the law that they should be subjected to the same provisions as individuals in the matter of withholding the income at the source.

Time Payments Cover.

The income tax must be paid by corporations for the full year, but by individuals from March 1, 1913, until Dec. 31. The amendment to the United States constitution, legalizing an income tax, did not go into effect until last February, and it was [illegible] possible for persons to [illegible] retroactive [illegible] be required to deduct the amount of the income tax for the full period of 10 months, or on payments already made, but only for the months of November and December.

Individuals who make their returns between Jan. 1 and March 1 will have until June 30 to make payment to the Government. If the tax is not paid then the Collector of Internal Revenue, after 10 days' notice, shall add five per cent to the amount of the tax unpaid and interest at the rate of 1 per cent a month.

Additional Regulations.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington Saturday issued the following additional regulations:

"The following income is exempt from normal tax of 1 per cent being withheld at source:

"Proceeds from life insurance contracts, except annual interest payments in excess of $3000.

"Income of individuals which is not fixed or certain, such as income of farmers, merchants, agents compensated on commission basis, lawyers, doctors, authors, inventors and other professional persons with no fixed annual income.

"The value of property acquired by gift, bequest or descent.

"Interest upon the obligations of the United States or its possesions or a state or any political subdivision thereof. Salary of President and Federal Judges. All salaries paid by a state, county or municipality, including salaries of public school teachers.

"The normal tax is not to be withheld until such time as the total payments of an annual income exceeds $3000, then the tax is required to be withheld on the amounts of the total payments unless claim for exemption is filed with withholding agent.

"Persons liable for the normal tax of 1 per cent may claim from withholding agent or collector of internal revenue, benefit of a deduction of taxes, interest and other items as provided by law.

"Persons subject to the normal tax of 1 per cent, when absent from the United States or physically unable to make returns required by law, may, under certain conditions, appoint agents to act for them.

"The penalty for false or fraudulent returns of statement with intent to defeat or evade the tax is a fine of not exceeding $2000 or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both."

Interest on $80,000,000 Coupon Bonds Due in New York.

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—The confusion among the New York financial institutions which has arisen from the income tax regulations of the Treasury Department, requiring them to collect "at the source," continues. The interest on $80,000,000 of coupon bonds falls due today.

The United States Steel Corporation has decided to pay the full interest, amounting to $5,000,000, on its guaranteed bonds, but it announced that it would require that the certificates must be presented with the coupons. In case of out-of-town bondholders, the payment of the interest will be deferred until the certificates have been received.

Several bankers predicted that the attempt of the Government to enforce a collection "at the source" would prove so cumbersome and generally unsatisfactory that the law would be amended at the next session of Congress either to eliminate this feature or to substitute other forms of raising revenue. Some bankers expressed the hope that the Government would return to the stamp tax on checks and legal documents as the most equitable and least cumbersome method of meeting the deficit in the revenue expected from the reduction in the tariff schedule.

Because of the heavy income tax collection, which will necessitate the banks providing themselves with extra resources, there was heavy calling of loans yesterday, with the result that the call rate on the Stock Exchange advanced to 10 per cent, the highest level since November, 1912.

LIFE'S STRUGGLE WITH ILLNESS

Mrs. Stewart Tells How She Suffered from 16 to 45 years old—How Finally Cured.

"Because of total ignorance of how to care for myself when a young girl, and from taking cold when going to school, I suffered severe pains at intervals. I would have nausea, which always meant a lay-off from work for two to four days from the time I was 16 years old.

"I went to Kansas to live with my sister, and while there a doctor told me of the Pinkham remedies, but I did not use them then, as my faith in patent medicines was limited. After my sister died I came home to Ohio to live, and that has been my home for the last 18 years.

"When I was 47 years old I saw my physical condition plainly described in one of your advertisements. Then I began using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I cannot tell you or anyone the relief it gave me in the first three months. It put me right where I need not lay off, and during the last 18 years I have not paid out two dollars to a doctor, and have been blest with excellent health for a woman of my age, and I can thank Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for it.

"Since this time I have been a maternity nurse, and, being wholly self-supporting, I cannot overestimate the value of good health. I have now earned a comfortable little home just by sewing and nursing since I was 52 years old. I have recommended the Compound to many, with good results, as it is excellent to take before and after childbirth."—Miss EVELYN ADELIA STEWART, Euphemia, Ohio.

FRENCH PILOT WINS GIRL HE MET AT BALLOON RACE

Kansas City Divorcee Will Become Bride of Man She Met Here Oct., 1910.

The forthcoming marriage of Miss Julia Thompson of Kansas City and Ernest G. Schmolck, a former European, now living in New York, which was announced Saturday, will be the second international romance which began as a result of the international balloon race from St. Louis in the autumn of 1910. The first was that of Miss Frances Scoville of Seneca, Kan., and Waltof de Mumm of Paris, France, who were married June 2 last at St. George's Church in Hanover Square, London. Mumm and Miss Scoville met in St. Louis.

Miss Thompson is the divorced wife of Harry W Loose, heir to the millions of the biscuit-making family. She resumed her maiden name when the decree was granted July 14, 1910. She attended the start of the ballon race here three months later and met Schmolck, who sailed as aid to Jacques Faure in the balloon Condor, representing France. Faure was a younger brother of a former President of France.

The wedding will take place at the bride's home in Kansas City, Dec. 6. Miss Thompson is a daughter of Dr. and Mrs. John Henry Thompson of that city.

Bridegrooms Photographed Together.

Schmolk and De Mumm, who belong to the noted family of champagne manufacturers, were photographed together in St. Louis just before the start of the balloon race. De Mumm met Miss Scoville, whose father is a Kansas banker, while in this country to participate in the race as aid to Alfred Le Blanc.

Miss Thompson married Loose at Swampscott, Mass., a few years ago. The announcement of the marriage was a great surprise to her friends in Kansas City. She met Loose at an Eastern summer resort. At the divorce hearing she told of a quarrel in the Pompeiian room at the Baltimore Hotel in Kansas City.

She went to live with her parents after the divorce and it was understood for a time that she intended to study for the stage. Though Loose is wealthy, Miss Thompson received as alimony only $10,000 and a house, with furnishings.

CARNEGIE MEDALS AND $1000 EACH TO 2 ST. LOUIS HEROES

Detective Sergeant A. McGuire and Louis O. Mott Placed on the Roll of Honor.

For their heroism in rescuing five negroes in last spring's flood, Detective Sergeant Arthur McGuire of 3423 Chippewa street and Louis O. Mott of 825 Tesson street, have received an award of gold medals and $1000 each from the Carnegie Hero Commission. They were notified Friday afternoon of the commission's action in placing them on the hero's roll of honor.

The rescue was made at 2 a. m., March 25 last, near the foot of Poepping street in Carondelet. The River Des Peres at that point had overflowed its banks and was threatening the lives of many dwellers along the water front.

Cries for Help in Dark.

In the darkness of the stormy morning, Patrolman McGuire heard cries for help. They came from a cabin which was surrounded by the rushing flood and battered by driftwood.

McGuire jumped into a skiff and called for volunteers to accompany him to the cabin. Only one man, Louis Mott, 4 feet 19 inches tall, stepped forward.

In the darkness, with only the policeman's flash lamp to guide them, they rowed out into the stream, risking their lives to answer the call for help. Several times the boat was struck by driftwood and almost overturned.

McGuire and Mott found George Barton, a negro, and his wife and three children standing on furniture in the cabin with the water above their knees and rising rapidly.

McGuire Promoted.

They placed the family in the skiff and attempted to row to shore. The current was so strong and the floating driftwood so thick that the boat was swept downstream and dashed against a house.

To prevent the skiff from being battered to pieces against a bridge McGuire clung to the steps of the house. He held this position until other policemen and a city fireman crawled out on the mass of driftwood around the bridge and attached ropes to the boat.

For his heroism in rescuing the Barton family McGuire received 25 extra merit marks from the Board of Police Commissioners and was promoted to the rank of detective Sergeant.

Mott is a shoeworker, 22 years old. His mother, Mrs. Catherine Weidel, said Saturday that about a month ago two representatives of the Carnegie commission visited her son and obtained from him an account of the rescue. At that time he had no intimation that he was to receive a medal and a cash award. Mrs. Weidel said her son probably would use the money to buy horses and wagons and go into the teaming business.

DR. HAYES HOWELL IS NEW CUPPLES PASTOR

The Rev. Hayes Howell of Clarendon Ark., was appointed Friday as pastor of the Cupples Memorial M. E. Church, South, in University City. The appointment was made by Bishop E. E. Hoss, after a conference with other bishops attending the fall meeting of the College of Bishops, in session in St. John's Church.

He will take the place made vacant by the refusal of the Executive Board of the church to receive the Rev. G. H. Holmes of Hematite, Mo., who was appointed by Bishop Hoss at the regular conference. Members of the congregation objected to the Rev. Mr. Holmes because of his youth.

Dr. Howell is 30 years old, is married, and has been a minister eight years. He is a graduate of Vanderbilt University. He will assume his new duties about Dec. 5.

center and forming an X-shaped structure. The railroads will bear the construction expense, estimated at $500,000.

Of all the adjacent industrial property, the Landau Cabinet Co. occupies the place of greatest interference under this plan. The company's factory and offices abut on Tower Grove avenue on the east and Vandeventer avenue on the west, each of which will be elevated to such an extent that the company maintains it will be hemmed in and that it will be difficult if not impossible to drive teams into or out of the grounds. The depression of the railroad tracks will necessitate the lowering of a lead track upon which the cabinet company depends for its shipping facilities.

Other industries in the vicinity are so far removed from the streets affected that they will be able to have egress and ingress under the new grades.

No Sympathy With Senators.

This scheme of delayed compromise does not satisfy the President. The suggestion that some of the Democratic members of the committee who have delayed the action on the bill should be given an opportunity to "save their faces" has not received any sympathy at the White House. The President is standing upon precisely the same ground that he took several weeks ago and has reiterated repeatedly.

That the Democratic members of the Senate should stand together and fight together for a Democratic bill that would be absolutely independent of a suggestion of Wall street domination.

That this course should be followed openly and above board without compromise.

That he does not propose to harbor any members of the party whom he believes is playing "hide and seek" between the administration and the bankers.

Members of the committee today were surprised greatly when they read in the New York World that the President proposed to fight for the retention of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Comptroller of the Currency on the Federal Board. These two officers were stricken from the board yesterday and some of those who voted to strike them off did not appear to realize that the President was greatly irritated by the action.

The vote to establish four banks and allow the Federal Board to increase the number to 12 was taken on motion of Senator O'Gorman of New York, who favored a central bank owned by the Government a few days ago.

Stock Subscription Up Today.

The committee expects to dispose of the methods of stock subscription today. The Glass bill provides that banks shall subscribe the capital by investing 10 per cent of their capital.

O'Gorman offered a motion for consideration, providing that the stock shall be purchased jointly by the public and the banks. The President is unalterably opposed to this plan. The committee is expected to vote upon this phase of the bill today.

There was a general feeling in the committee that the bill would be adopted by a unanimous vote and reported to the Senate by the end of next week or early the following week. Many members of the committee are satisfied that if such a course is followed there will be excellent prospects of passing the measure at this session.

MRS. CLARA HORST.

Mrs. Clara Horst Tells Police How Man Escaped After She Found Him on Porch.

Mrs. Clara Horst, 40 years old, of 2357A Market street, told policemen who were called to her home at 1 a. m. Saturday of a thrilling struggle she had with a burglar. She declared she had shot the man once and had placed a revolver against his head to make her work sure, when the robber seized the weapon in time to deflect the muzzle as she pulled the trigger.

Patrolmen who investigated the matter found the neighborhood greatly excited over the disturbance, in which four shots were fired by Mrs. Horst. They picked up the thief's derby hat which he had left on a porch.

Mrs. Horst, who was formerly a bareback rider in a circus, occupies a three-room flat alone, except for a negro servant, who does not remain at night. Friday night she went to bed at 10 o'clock in the middle room. At midnight the barking of her dog, Marshon, in the dining room, awakened her. She took her revolver from under her pillow and went into the dining room.

An attempt was being made, as she could tell by the sounds, she said, to pry the rear window up. The shade was down and she could see nothing, but she shot through the shade and pane and then rushed out on the porch.

She declared she found a man huddled on the floor, under the window, groaning. She stepped close to him, pointed the revolver at his head and was about to shoot again, when he seized her hand and turned the revolver away and sprang up and clutched her by the throat.

In the struggle, while she was being dragged half way down the steps toward the rear yard, Mrs. Horst fired four shots, but they all went wild. She bit the man on the face and arm and screamed for help. He finally tore loose and ran out into the alley and escaped.

Mrs. Horst called in Mrs. Lillie Hawk, living next door, and Mrs. Hawk stayed the rest of the night with her. Mrs. Horst went to the engine house at Jefferson avenue and Walnut street and informed the night watchman. He notified the Laclede Avenue Police Station.

Mrs. Horst says she has considerable jewelry and supposes that the man was after that. "No man can come and get it," she said Saturday. "I will shoot them every time."

AUTO HITS MAN IN STREET DARKENED BY CELEBRATORS

Thomas McGrath, Run Down by Harry Nelon, Unable to See Him Crossing Ahead.

Halloween jokers who had turned out the street lamps, made possible the serious injury of a man who was run down by an automobile in front of 3600 South Broadway. Thomas McGrath of 3708 Nebraska avenue, an ironworker, started to cross the darkened street and was knocked down by an automobile driven by Harry Nelon, of 4441 Forest Park boulevard. He was injured internally and two ribs on his right side were broken. He was taken to St. Anthony's Hospital by Nelon in his car. Nelon said on account of the darkness he failed to see McGrath until too late to avoid him.

No other serious accidents were reported to the police as the result of Halloween pranks, but the activities of youths in all sections kept the police busy.

Hug Costs Diamond Pin.

Three women in black faces dressed as baseball players amused crowds at Jefferson avenue and Market street, Friday night. Two of the entertainers wore male baseball costumes and catcher's masks and mitts, and the other was clad as a bloomer girl.

The women hugged several men on the streets, according to the police, one of the men being Cleveland Whitfield, a light-colored negro. Whitfield reported to the patrolmen that after he was hugged he discovered that his diamond scarfpin, valued at $50, was missing.

Seven youths who stopped to quarrel after they had accompanied young women home from Halloween parties were arrested at 2 a. m. Saturday at Plymouth and Hodiamont avenues. Their arguments became so loud that the attention of the police was attracted and they were locked up. George E. Farrow, 18 years old, of 6413 Wellsmar avenue, was charged with carrying concealed weapons.

The young men told the police they had attended various parties and met at the corner on their way home. Farrow came up while the others were talking and as he approached some of the others said "Get him." Farrow was displaying a revolver, the police say.

Few arrests were made for Halloween antics and the police say there was little rowdyism. Many persons complained that small boys were "tick-tacking" their homes. The result of the tattoo on the window panes was pleasing to the youthful noisemakers, but rasped the feelings of many residents.

Street Lights Turned Out.

Street lights in various sections of St. Louis were turned out by the boys. A string of electric lights maintained by the United Railways company on Oakland avenue from King's highway to Skinker road was turned off at a switch near Forest Park Highlands, and the streets were in darkness a greater part of the night.

Boys Pull Buggy, Flee Police.

Patrolman Archey, at Michigan avenue and Bates street, at 9 o'clock, saw a queer procession. Several boys were pulling a dilapidated buggy, one sitting in the vehicle giving directions to the others. The crowd ran when they saw the patrolman, but Archey caught the "driver," Thomas Cox, 16, of 5619 Pennsylvania avenue.

Cox said at the Carondelet Police Station that he met the crowd at Michigan avenue and Dover street and they asked him to get in the buggy and take a ride. He was released.

"The Tawny Thrush"

PINE spirit!
Breath and voice of a wild glade!
In the wild forest near it,
In the cool hemlock or the leafy limb,
Whereunder
Thou dost run and wander
Thro' the sun and shade,
An elvish echo and a shadow dim,
There in the twilight dost thou lift thy song,
And give the stilly woods a silver tongue.
Out of what liquid is thy laughing made?
A sister of the water thou dost seem,
The quivering cataract thou singest near,
Whose glistening stream,
Unto the listening ear,
Thou dost outrun with thy cascade
Of music beautiful and swift and clear—
A joy unto the mournful forest given!
As when afar
A traveling star
Across the midnight races,
A moving gleam that quickly ceases,
Lost in the blue black abyss of heaven,
So doth thy light and silver singing
Start and thrill
The silence round thy piney hill,
Unto the sober hour a jewel bringing—
A mystery—a strain of rhythm fleeing—
A vagrant echo winging
Back to the unuttered theme of being!

From "Child of the Amazons" and other poems, by Max Eastman. (Mitchell Kennerly.)

THE PRICE OF PLACE.

THE novel of Washington life, "The Price of Place," by Samuel G. Blythe, weaves the inside of the political game, the feminine social climb, and the diplomatic routine, into an interesting story well told. The people who walk through its pages are real human beings, and the intimate sides of the characters are laid bare by the hand of one who knows his subject.

The tale points to no moral. It is not an attempt to preach. But the bunco in politics and the mockery and snobbery of society in the national capital are told in a plain, unvarnished way, convincing in its reality. It is a revelation in the waste of moral sense in American political life.

The political boss, who could not be elected to any office because of a general distrust of his methods and morals, is shown to be the power behind the manikins who stand out boldly before the voters and represent them in office, but who could not be elected without the support of the organization controlled by the boss. So the master hand bosses the organization, dictates nominations, and claims his reward in the way of appointive offices, fat receiverships and the patronage distributed by bigger bosses of the State and nation.

The story is written around a young lawyer who is elected to Congress with the aid of the party boss. He later objects to being bossed, turns down bossism, defies the boss—and becomes a boss himself. Then he discovers that he has become a part of the organization bossed by another boss who had diplomatically advised him to break away from the first boss.

During the eight years in which the central character rises from a country lawyer to a United States Senator, and is beginning to look with longing eyes toward the seat in the White House, it keeps him hustlingn to provide the money to pay for dresses, dinners and entertainments of his wife and daughter in their frantic climb up the social ladder. In the end he finds that he has accumulated $200,000—thanks to tips on the markets, shares in real estate schemes, profits in little co-operative deals, and legal retainers given to him in a veiled manner by those who hope to influence legislation.

When his ambition to rise higher became known, the interests which had been using him planned their master stroke. He had then come to the parting of the ways. If he granted their request he would have to break with his party. If he did not, he would be discredited by the schemers. Either meant retirement to private life.

His answer to a friend who advised him at this time to "cut loose before it is too late," was the frantic cry of a man who had been engulfed by the power of money: "How can a man cut loose when he is bound by chains of gold?"

He had played the game. He had paid the price.

This is the advice of a Senator to the newly elected Congressman:

"There are a lot of busy-izzy reformers and disturbers in this district, and they will try to get you. They will appeal to your so-called patriotism and your deep affection for the common people. But forget it."

A reformer, as seen through the eyes of a politician, is thus defined:

"A reformer is a man with a grievance and wants to plaster everybody with that grievance. Or he is one of those exalted idiots who thinks that because he doesn't approve of a man, or a method, or a manner, that it is the duty of everybody else to disapprove of it. These reformsers won't argue. They won't reason. They just condemn and command."

"Congress is the greatest tit-for-tat institution in the world," one of the book's characters tells us. "The organization runs the game, and if the members are on the game they get their share. If they buck the organization, they lose out three ways—in Congress, at home, and with the bosses."

After the young Congressman had found out about seed and document distribution, and learned the efficacy of well-placed seeds and public documents as vote-holders, he received the following advice about the people—from a Senator who had learned the fine points of the game:

"When you get down to bedrock, despite all of the yawp and yawn about the people, and despite the public parading of love for the same by the men in Congress, you will discover that the people—the real people—for whom legislation is passed, consists of two Senators from each state and whatever number of representatives in Congress each state has. They are the people. The rest of the population is a means to their ends."

The chief evil of the American political system, as pointed out in the rise and fall of the hero, is not dishonesty, but hypocricy—the eternal pretense of legislating for the people, when the fact is that they are legislating for themselves first, and the people get only the crumbs. (Doran Co.)

ANTHONY COMSTOCK, FIGHTER.

AFTER 40 years of crusading against obscene books and other publications, Anthony Comstock, the celebrated New York vice fighter, has landed upon the book shelves. The author, Charles Gallaudet Trumbull, presents an intimate picture of Comstock in his adventures which have resulted in the destruction of 50 tons of obscene books, 35,000 pounds of stereotype plates, 2,500,000 pictures and 12,000 portrait negatives.

He picks up Comstock in his native village of Winnipauk, Conn., where he blossomed out as the only lad in town who had the courage to take a gun and kill several mad dogs that were running at large. He takes him to New York, where, after a few years' work as a salesman in dry goods houses, he blossoms forth as a crusader against evil publications.

The biographer tells how Comstock worked 40 years as a nonsalaried post-office inspector in the pursuit of publishers of under-world literature, and how successful he was in his prosecutions. Out of 3823 arrests that he caused to be made he obtained 2120 convictions, which is conceded to be "a high batting average" in the days of lax prosecutions that extended back through the 40-year period of Comstock's crusades. (Revell.)

"THE TEXAN TRIUMPH."

JOSEPH A. ALTSHELER, who previously wrote of the adventures of Ned Fulton in "The Texan Star" and "The Texan Scouts," here tells a third story of a youth's thrilling deeds in Mexican War days. It is made clear that Ned Fulton possesses a charmed life, as he emerges unhurt from place after place where any other boy would infallibly get killed. The history told in the story is valuable knowledge for any boy, and is of particular interest at this time. (Appleton's.)

"BEYOND THE OLD FRONTIER."

AMERICAN history in its most essentially American part, the conquest of the West, is told in George Bird Grinnell's well-prepared work. The adventures of Indian fighters, hunters and fur-traders are related, and a particularly interesting chapter tells of the habits of the buffalo and of the Indians' means of killing this hardest to kill of all quadrupeds, not excepting even the rhinoceros.

Much is said of the Bent family, of which Silas Bent, Judge of the Superior Court in St. Louis until his death in 1827, and William Bent, first white settler in Colorado, were distinguished members. Others of this large family were famous as Indian traders.

The feats of Kit Carson, Gen. Kearny, George Frederick Ruxton and other historic characters of the frontier are told in wholesome and unexaggerated stories. (Scribner.)

THE ARABIAN NIGHTS.

FRANCES JENKINS OLCOTT, for many years head of the Training School for Children's Librarians at the Pittsburg library, has made an edition of "The Arabian Nights Entertainment," based on a translation from the Arabic by Edward William Lane. The stories are illustrated in color by Monro S. Orr. The book includes the stories of Aladdin and Ali Baba, without which no edition of the entertainments would be complete, and a number of stories adopted from the Lane translation which are both new and suitable to children. (Henry Holt & Co.)

"RING FOR NANCY."

MAJ. EDWARD BRENT FOSTER, the youngest Major in the British Army, was, not so long ago, in love with Mary Savylle. Mrs. Kerr Howe, author, is in love with him. Flossie Delamare, an actress, regards him with a gratitude and friendship such as are sometimes mistaken, by onlookers, for love. That makes three.

Miss Olympia Peabody, Bostonian and social reformer, whose ambitious program included "the complete disappearance of breach of promise suits in the United States," makes four; for the Major, for no very comprehensible reason, is engaged to her. And Nancy Jenkins, lady's maid, whom the Major wanted to kiss, the first time he saw her in cap and apron, makes five—or does she?

At any rate, the youngest Major, etc., is surrounded by a very active group of feminine personalities. The writer, Ford Madox Hueffer, has drawn the characters well, and has placed them in "rather Frenchy" situations. It is unfortunate that he has not handled the situations with quite that lightness of touch which is required to make a "sheer comedy," such as this novel is proclaimed to be, wholly acceptable. Some clever oddities appear, as the Major's burlesques on Henry James' writings, and the discourses of the head of the Quietist Church, who never lost his temper, but was at times subject to "a marked quickening of ideas." (Bobbs-Merrill.)

"THE BROKEN HALO."

MINGLED feelings are aroused by the reading of Mrs. Florence L. Barclay's latest novel, "The Broken Halo." When the ultimate leaf is turned the expectant one waiting across the table inquires, "Is it a good story?" "Oh, yes," the reader is inclined to reply, "it is a good story"—with the accent strictly on the "good"—and then the reader is inclined further to make the brief but mysterious remark, "But"—

The book is, in fact, almost goody-goody. It might do service as a Sunday-school tract, provided the youthful pupil may be counted upon to read to the end, where the moral is clinched and riveted. But the youthful reader is not likely to be strongly attracted by a love story in which the hero is 27 and the heroine past 60. He or she may stop half way through and turn to a romance in which Dick is 10 years older than Helen, instead of being 35 years her junior. In that case the youthful reader would be left with a bad taste in the mouth, savoring of a naughty boy who denied God and heaven and religion at the tender age of 7 and became a professed agnostic.

Dick is Dr. Richard Cameron. Helen is Mrs. Herriot. Dr. Dick is a Napoleonic sort of fellow, in a way, having a philosophy of life that may be expressed in the three slangish words, "get there, regardless." At times, in reading about Dick, you think him a cad. At times he thinks so himself, and worries over it.

At other times Dick assumes the aspect of a seraph, wingless to be sure, yet nevertheless of almost angelic quality. The main thing one comes to dislike about Dick—that is, one who believes in romantic love—is that he dismisses romantic love as an unnecessary encumbrance. He has no thought of marriage except in opposition thereto—until he discovers that according to the terms of the will of the late Mr. Herriot the venerable Mrs. Herriot may bequeath her considerable inheritance to a new husband if she acquires one. Mrs. Herriot is Dr. Dick's star patient. He has saved her life—for a time. But he knows, as a learned prognostician, that she is going to die of heart disease within six months.

Then the young physician proposes marriage, on the plea that if he can live in her home and be handy at all hours he can preserve her life 20 years longer. There is a young woman, a beautiful and splendid one, who loves Dick, but she is handicapped by having a husband, a clergyman with a soul as narrow as an icicle and as cold. She is loyal to him, too.

Well, Dr. Dick marries the venerable widow, who is a loveable, gentle soul Sixty-past and 27 mate! The chilly curate dies nobly and suddenly, trying to save a child from being run down by an automobile. The venerable rewedded widow passes away suddenly about the same time.

It is not fair to tell the whole story here. Everybody who read "The Rosary" will wish to read "The Broken Halo," just for comparison if for nothing else. (Putnam's.)

TWO BOOKS BY IRVIN COBB.

IRVIN S. COBB'S prolific pen has produced two more books, both of which will be to his credit, as are his other works. Cobb has the ability of making two smiles appear where frowns grew before. He does it all in a subtle manner.

In one of the books, "Cobb's Bill-of-Fare," he describes food, music, art and sport. Of course we all partake more or less of every one of these items on the bill of fare from day to day. Few of us, however, know that there is a humorous side to these things until Cobb opens our eyes. He makes us laugh heartily.

Cobb can be serious just as he can be funny and he proves it in his story, "The Escape of Mr. Trimm." This is, strictly speaking, a series of stories giving the advantures of a respectable financier who finds himself in the clutches of the law on account of a business deal which is not exactly in accordance with the law. In fact Mr. Trimm would not have been troubled very much a few years ago. But there is a new social conscience at work in our day.

Mr. Trimm's experiences give the author a chance to show his knowledge of human nature and his ability at describing what he observes. (Doran.)

ADVENTURES IN THE ALPS.

THERE is not as much about adventures in the Alps as one could wish, in Archibald Campbell Knowles' "Adventures in the Alps." It does not relate the personal adventures of the author and he draws very lightly on the abundant lore of mountain-climbing adventure. Such stories of adventure as are incorporated in the book are not told in a manner to preserve their inherent dramatic qualities. The title is, therefore, somewhat misleading.

In spite of this and a lack of smoothness in the author's style, which is that of the traveloguist rather than that of the descriptive writer, the book is well worth while for its informative contents. It is better than a guide-book in that the information it conveys is vitalized by the personal observances and experiences of the author.

To persons who have traveled in the Alps the detailed treatment should be very interesting, enabling them to retrace, in fancy, their own journeys and compare experiences, and for the same reason it should appeal to all who contemplate such travel. The power of the mountains to stir the deepest emotions and lead the mind into religious contemplation is effectively shown. The book is well illustrated. (Jacobs & Co.)

ROMANCE OF A STAR.

"ANNE, Actress," or "The Romance of a Star," by Juliet G. Sager, is a story of the stage. The novel, "by a former actress," might also bear the title, "Anne, Actress and Mother."

"Anne, Actress" takes you into the world behind the footlights—into the manager's office, into the wings, into the dressing room, into the home life of stage people. She goes with you to rehearsal. She introduces you to the author of the new play—his first—and to the scene-shifter and the maid.

You meet Anne in "stock" and you sympathize with her ambition to become a star, and you follow her in her hard-fought struggles for success. You admire her red hair, her youthful figure and her splendid spirit, and you delight in the fact that she is a womanly woman.

It is not all a narrow run between her home and the stage, this story of Anne. There is a broader, deeper, less selfish—or perhaps more selfish—theme in this life of Anne than her ambition to become a star—the love of a mother. "Anne, Actress" is a worth-while story. A young woman, on reading the ups and downs and the "Victory" of Anne, said, "It is so sweet, it is so beautiful—Anne's way. I must have mother read this book."—(Stokes.)

THE FAWN AND OTHER POEMS.

GENEVIEVE FARNELL-BOND brings out a volume of her poems, many of which became known through the magazines. The volume takes its title from the first poem, which has been used also in "The Lyric Year." The book includes a short introduction by Edwin Markham, who welcomes the author among new poets. He feels that new poets bring renovation into our life and soul. Here are some stanzas from the first poem:

"Sometimes you hear me in the dawn,
The little-horned, fleet-footed Faun;
You see a ripple as I pass
And shake the dew-pearls from the grass—
A shadow through the gray morass,
So quickly gone.
* * *
"I hide to watch the ruddy sun
Light up each dew-globe, one by one,
Until, with opalescent blaze,
A-spangle is the rosy haze
That lies along the wooded ways
Where I have run."

These are but stanzas of this beautiful poem. There are other fine poems in the book. The love poems are particularly wholesome. (Sherman-French Co.)

JEWISH YEAR BOOK.

THE Jewish Year Book for 1913-14, or the Jewish year 5674, contains as its special feature an article about the Jewish Publication Society of America. The organization celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary last year. The article in the Year Book gives a history of the organization and of its efforts to bring out the works of great Jewish writers here and abroad.

Two of the most important things accomplished by the Jewish Publication Society are the publication of a translation of Prof. Graetz's history of the Jews (six volumes) and the discovery of Israel Zangwill. But the society has done a great deal more, and is ready for more work in years to come. The article is illustrated and is worth reading.

There is also an article giving the influence of the Balkan wars upon the Jews and their contributions to these wars in man and in money. Then follows a list of events of interest to the Jews both here and abroad.

Among Jews who have been honored by elections and appointments are a number of St. Louis residents. Among those are Judge Irvin Barth, Maurice Frankenthal, Rabbi Leon Harrison, Mrs. Henry Ittleson, Ellis A. Stix, Oscar Leon[illegible]

...UGHTER'S WEDDING TO ...AUFFEUR PARTS FAMILY

...as French Is Sued for Di-...vorce by Wife Who Has Forgiven Couple.

By Leased Wire From the New York Bureau of the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—Mrs. Amos Tuck French, social leader at New York, Newport and Tuxedo, and mother of Mrs. Samuel Wagstaff and Mrs. Jack Geraghty, has instituted suit for divorce in Rhode Island. The papers are on file at Newport and are understood to have been served on French several days ago.

French is a brother of Mrs. Elsie French Vanderbilt and of Lady Cheylesmere of England, who has just arrived here on a visit. He is a banker with offices at 20 Wall street. Nonsupport is among the charges.

Following the elopement of his daughter Julia and her marriage to "Jack" Geraghty, the family's chauffeur, in August, 1911, French became estranged from his family. He opposed a reconciliation. The Geraghtys, however, have been forgiven by Mrs. French and many influential members of the family. The young couple are now living happily in Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. French were married 28 years ago Dec. 2 next. For some time the wife has been at Newport. French is living at Tuxedo and New York. In September, when Mrs. French and her mother, Mrs. Stuyvesant Leroy, were injured in an automobile accident near Boston, French did not visit his wife.

Besides the children above mentioned, the couple have two sons, Amos Tuck French Jr. and Stuyvesant Leroy French.

The suit will probably be heard this month.

HENNING IS IDENTIFIED IN FUNK CASE TRIAL

Apartment Owner Says He Was Visitor of His Own Wife, Known to Her as "Mrs. Baker."

CHICAGO, Nov. 1.—John C. Henning today made his first appearance in Judge Pam's court, where Daniel Donahoe and Isaac Stiefel are on trial, charged with conspiracy to defame Clarence S. Funk. Henning had brought an unsuccessful damage suit against Funk, charging he alienated the affections of Mrs. Henning. Henning appeared only long enough to be identified by Mrs. Mary Pierce. She had sublet her apartment to Mrs. Catherine Ryan, with whom Mrs. Henning, under the name Baker, lived for a time. The witness identified Henning as having visited "Mrs. Baker."

The names of former Senator William Lorimer and of Edward Hines, lumberman, were brought into the record when Edwin Slavin, a bellboy testified. He was employed by Stiefel to testify that Funk and Mrs. Henning were registered together at the Grand Pacific Hotel. "I told Stiefel that I knew Mrs. Henning, because she had lived in my neighborhood, but that I did not know Funk," Slavin said. "He asked me if I had any grievance against Hines or Lorimer and I said that I had none. Stiefel gave me $25 and said I would receive $21 a week for testifying in the Henning-Funk case."

MRS. LILLIAN LEMP SUED FOR FEE BY ALIMONY ATTORNEY

John S. Leahy Declares He Has Been Paid Only $1500 for $6500 Due.

A suit against Mrs. Lillian Handlan Lemp, divorced wife of William J. Lemp Jr., was filed Friday in the Circuit Court by the law firm of Leahy, Sanders & Barth, to recover $5200.04, alleged to be due for services rendered to Mrs. Lemp in her divorce litigation.

Another suit for $8500 is pending against Mrs. Lemp, brought by the estate of the late Daniel Dillon, for fees in connection with the divorce proceedings. In the petition filed Friday it is alleged that John S. Leahy, one of the plaintiffs, took charge of the legal affairs of Mrs. Lemp after the death of Judge Dillon. He has transferred his interest in the litigation to the law firm of which he is a member.

The petition sets forth that Leahy's fee was $6500 and that $1500 has been paid. The $204.04 is for incidental expenses. Leahy asserts that he held many conferences with Mrs. Lemp and her father, A. H. Handlan, and represented her in the divorce case in which she was awarded alimony of $6000 a year.

He argued the case twice in the higher courts, and Mrs. Lemp was awarded $100,000 alimony in gross, in lieu of the yearly payments.

Mrs. Lemp is not in St. Louis and is said to be in New York. Her son, whose custody was awarded to Mrs. Lemp, is in a school in the East.

The divorce trial attracted wide attention and occupied the courts for many months. Mrs. Lemp became known as "The Lavender Lady" because of the various lavender gowns she wore. She frequently appeared on the streets and at social functions in smart costumes of a lavender hue.

A Unique Custom.

Some years ago the Vinol fraternity, of which the Wolff-Wilson Drug Co. are members, originated the idea of having a national display week of Vinol and companion products, semi-annually.

This Vinol fraternity must be quite an extensive organization, for returned travelers tell of the wonderful displays of Vinol which they have noticed in their travels through Canada, Cuba and as far away as South America.

Wolff-Wilson's attractive window arrangements and store decoration show the same enthusiasm which they have for years put behind this meritorious Cod-Liver and Iron preparation.

Later in the season they intend to give away a new Vinol Cook Book to their customers. Every woman interested in good cooking recipes should call and get one.

"LAZIEST MAN" BURIED IN A PAUPER'S GRAVE

John Muncrae, widely known as "the laziest man in the world," bedridden at the Jersey County poor farm for 13 years, died Friday. He was more than 70 years old. He had been a wood chopper. He quit working, slept in the woods and begged his food. During the first years of his stay at the farm, to which he was sent 35 years ago, he was ordered to the fields with other inmates who were deemed able to work, but he never worked. He sought the shady side of a straw stack and went to sleep.

Fifteen years ago he refused to leave his bed except for meals. After two years of that he refused to get up for meals and it was necessary to take his meals to his bed. He ate them usually lying flat on his back. Some scientists have thought he was insane.

His body was buried Saturday in the County Farm cemetery. The Rev. W. S. Neeley of the First Presbyterian church conducted the funeral.

U. S. REWARDS BOY HERO

Russell P. Reader Jr. Risked Life to Save Younger Child.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1.—Gallantry in saving the life of a little child at the risk of his own has won for 11-year-old Russell Porter Reeder Jr. a silver medal of honor from the United States Government. Secretary McAdoo of the Treasury Department today announced the award in recognition of the lad's fine conduct in rescuing George E. Mullin, 6 years old, who fell overboard from a small boat moored to a wharf at Fort McKinley, Great Diamond Island, Me., Aug. 5 last.

Young Reeder is the son of Capt. Russell Porter Reeder, Coast Corps.

NAPOLEON regretted all his life that Loftis Bros. & Co., 2d floor, 308 N. 6th st., were not then selling diamonds on credit.

COUNCIL RESCINDS INQUIRY MOVE IN PROTZMANN CASE

Investigation of City Legislator's Standing Is Dropped by 7 to 2 Vote.

Despite the opinion by former City Counselor Lambert E. Walther that a Councilman who negotiates a bond with the city is guilty of a misdemeanor and forfeits his office, the City Council, Friday, rescinded its action of last Tuesday, and voted 7 to 2 against investigating the right of Councilman William L. Protzmann to continue in office.

Protzmann admitted to his colleagues in a secret conference last Tuesday that he had written a $5000 bond in 1912 for the Regal Shoe Co., to secure the city under an excavating ordinance. Protzmann had engineered the bill to passage as a member of the Public Improvements Committee, at the request of a friend.

He subsequently wrote fire insurance for the Regal Shoe Co., he told a reporter of the Post-Dispatch, after a letter had been discovered in the files of the City Register's office indicating that Protzman had enjoyed business relations with the company that obtained a legislative concession.

May Cloud Bond Validity.

The decision of a majority of the Council at Friday's meeting to make no move against Protzmann's continuance in office, may create a situation that will cloud the validity of ordinances depending upon his vote, lawyers say. Fears have been expressed that unless Protzmann's legal right to vote is established beyond question bonds issued pursuant to an election called with the assistance of his vote might not find a ready market. The history of bond issues in St. Louis and elsewhere is that apparently trifling defects in the observance of legal forms determine investors to avoid the security on the advice of counsel.

This is so well recognized that St Louis and other American municipalities always retain the law firm of which Judge Dillon of New York is a member, to pass upon the correctness and validity of every detail in the authorization of bonds.

Councilman Henry Rower, who had a controversy with Councilman Paul R. Fletcher when the latter argued in the secret conference last Tuesday for an investigation, led the movement to reconsider the vote of 6 to 3 by which City Counselor Baird was asked for an opinion in the Protzmann case.

Rower Pleads for Protzmann.

Rower personally communicated with many Councilmen and attempted to win them over to Protzmann's side. He argued that the Council should not recognize the statements of fact published in the Post-Dispatch upon the discovery of the Protzmann letter, although corroborated by Protzmann in the secret conference. Unless charges were preferred, Rower contended, the Council should not take steps to "stir up trouble."

The vote Friday on a motion by Councilman Ebeling to reconsider Tuesday's action, was: Against an inquiry—Ebeling, Haller, Herrmann, Koenig, Paule, Randall and Rower. For an inquiry—Councilmen Arendes and Fletcher. Absent, Councilmen Meehan, Hines and Lazarus.

Councilmen Ebeling, Haller, Koenig and Herrmann reversed themselves in the vote.

Councilman Fletcher, who offered the original motion, asking an opinion of Baird, told his colleagues, who had reversed themselves, that they had made it impossible for themselves to conscientiously vote in the future to oust any Councilman who had performed an act similar to Protzmann's. He declared to reporters after the meeting that the proceedings resembled "opera bouffe."

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

Citizens' Committee on Garment Workers' Strike.
To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

I have read the communication entitled, "The Garment Workers' Strike," which is printed in your Thursday evening issue of Oct. 30, 1913, and signed "Garment Manufacturer." In fairness to both employers and employes, as well as to the committee who are endeavoring to learn what the real facts are, I request that you print this communication at your earliest opportunity.

On Wednesday afternoon, Oct. 29, a committee of citizens met at the City Club for the purpose of learning the facts surrounding the Ladies' Garment workers' industry and strike. There were present at that meeting Senator Michael Kinney, A. L. Shapleigh, Mrs. Josephine January and J. Lionberger Davis.

A request had theretofore been made of the strikers and their representatives and of the representatives of the manufacturers to appear and give the committee such facts as were necessary to inform the public of the actual conditions existing in the industry. The strikers were present and also were represented. The garment manufacturers failed to appear and failed to present any statement, and, although the chairman of their committee, Mr. S. S. Brill, was called up over the telephone by the chairman of the Committee of Citizens, he stated that he did not intend to appear and did not think any benefit could be obtained if he appeared or if a statement were made by his committee.

As chairman of the Committee of Citizens, I request your correspondent and other manufacturers involved in the present strike to notify the committee through me whether they desire to be heard, so that the committee will have the benefit of such statements as they make. The committee is anxious to make a fair statement of the actual facts without favoring either of the parties to the controversy, so that the public may be advised just what conditions exist.

At the hearing at the City Club on Oct. 29 the striking workers stated that they have been and are ready to meet their former employers for the purpose of discussing and, if possible, settling the various points in dispute, each party to be represented by a committee.

The committee further desires to bring about an agreement between the parties to the strike so that the proposals of the strikers may be agreed upon by the parties or their differences submitted to the State Board of Arbitration for decision.

J. LIONBERGER DAVIS, Chairman.

Fall in Line.
To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

Complete the bridge! Let the House of Delegates at once set a date for bond issue elections. We'll vote'r through all down the line. Any old approach will do. JAMES A. MURPHY.

Engineer Allison Explains.
To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

In your issue of Oct. 30 you printed an editorial entitled, "Watered Stock," in which you say "James E. Allison, chief engineer of the St. Louis Public Service Commission, told his City Club auditors, Tuesday, that 'watered stock in public utilities companies is essential to divide the risk between the stockholders and the bondholders.' He added: 'It will never disappear.'"

This statement very much misrepresents not only what I said in my speech but what I believe. As your own paper did not print a news account of my talk, I take it that your editorial writer obtained his information from a very inaccurate report printed in one of the morning papers. I did not say and do not think that "watered stock is essential" for any good purpose and I did not say and hope it is not a fact that "it will never disappear."

I was trying to explain to my audience that by the arrangement of the bonds and stocks a certain amount of apparent "water" might be allowed to earn returns under public valuation and regulation without affecting the consumer. This result is brought about by the fact that the bondholder is willing to give up a part of his share in the profits for the sake of added security, stability of return and relief from the troubles of operation; the stockholder gaining by the contract a benefit which might be capable of being capitalized.

The question is rather complicated and I was perhaps unwise to attempt it before a public audience where I ran the risk of not making my meaning clear to everyone.

I wish to go on record here as stating that any inference which might be drawn that I favor what is commonly known as "stock watering" is entirely erroneous. JAMES E. ALLISON.

A Vegetarian Appeal.
To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

Is there no protection for the vegetarian? Has he no constitutional rights? Shall the greasy-spoon restaurants any longer be allowed to thrust into the hands of unsuspecting vegetarians, on the street, cards with the announcement that a restaurant is serving seven kinds of meat? Imagine the vegetarian feelings over such an outrage [illegible]

AMENDMENT OR DEFEAT, WHICH?

The Post-Dispatch urges as a first step towards the completion of the bridge the adoption of the Hines bill, reducing the term of the Southern Traction Co.'s loop franchise from 50 to 25 years with an option of purchase by the city after 10 years.

This in reality means a 10-year franchise with an indeterminate period extending to 25 years.

The company's representatives in St. Louis say that the acceptance of this amendment depends upon the consent of the bondholders. There should be no question of their consent. The proposal is fair. It gives the railway an entrance into St. Louis on its own terminal tracks. It practically assures the continuance of the franchise during good behavior. In the event the city wants to own and operate the loop it guarantees the bondholders against loss. The property will be purchased on a fair appraisal.

If the amendment is not accepted the company will face two alternatives—repeal of the franchise or defeat of the bond issue, which would block its plans to use the municipal bridge and to enter St. Louis.

The Post-Dispatch has protested against the repeal of the franchise. We have urged the city to stand by its contract and to offer a fair compromise which would protect the company's privilege of entering St. Louis by the free bridge over its own loop and would satisfy the people by protecting the city's interests for the future. We have defended the company's franchise and supported the plan of reducing its term with guarantees of fair dealing.

We would not presume, however, to guarantee the company against repeal should it refuse this fair compromise. There is a strong popular sentiment in favor of repeal which, in the event of the failure of the amendment, might become overwhelming.

Nor would we presume to guarantee the success of the bond issue without either the amendment or repeal of the franchise. Although we believe there is a strong public sentiment in favor of completing the bridge, the Southern Traction loop franchise in its present form would strengthen the opposition and might result in the defeat of the issue.

Would the company prefer to have an entrance to St. Louis on its own loop in the near future or be kept out of St. Louis for an indefinite period by the repeal of its franchise or the defeat of the bond issue?

Would it prefer to have a St. Louis terminus with St. Louis traffic or to stop on the East Side?

This is the alternative confronting the promoters and bondholders of the Southern Traction Co.

Between Senator Reed's plan for 47 regional banks and the Glass bill's plan for 12, a better compromise is possible than the committee's tentative proposal for only four.

ST. LOUIS' LUCKY BABIES.

It is highly gratifying to have the testimony of the New York Health Department that infant mortality in St. Louis is the lowest of any city. Dr. Jordan, of our own Health Department, is quoted as saying that:

> The distribution of pure milk through the Post-Dispatch Fund has had a wonderful effect in checking infant mortality in St. Louis. The infant death rate in St. Louis in the last year was 23 a month less than the average for 11 years. This means a saving of 276 babies a year. The importance of work like that done by the Save the Babies League through the Post-Dispatch cannot be overestimated.

The thousands of gallons of pure, modified milk distributed to the mothers of babies in the tenements through the Post-Dispatch Pure Milk and Free Ice Fund were the principal factor in the life-saving campaign which Dr. Jordan commends. That St. Louis should take the lead over New York, where the Strauss pure milk charity has done so much, is striking proof of the efficiency of our pure milk service.

Any time the Athletic Union offers prizes for crowding the largest number of passengers into a street car, we desire to back the United Railways Co., at odds of five to one.

PRINTER MOORE'S SUIT.

Whatever the law may be, in the suit brought by Printer Moore to have the Sulzer impeachment reviewed by Federal courts, the facts are, as he charges, that a band of political freebooters, led by Boss Murphy, has seized control of the New York State government "for their sole use and benefit." Obeying a dictator whom the people have never clothed with governmental authority, New York State officials, constituting the Court of Impeachment, dismissed a Governor whom the people had elected, to punish him for refusing to help the gang loot the State.

Printer Moore charges that in these circumstances New York State has been deprived of the "republican form of government" guaranteed to it under the Federal Constitution. He charges further that the Legislature had no legal authority, in a special session called to consider specified subjects, to institute impeachment proceedings.

Mr. Moore's suit may not restore Sulzer to office, but it certainly will forcibly remind New York's people of their shameful condition of political slavery.

THE GRAFT IN POSTAL FRANKS.

The House Committee on Postoffices will urge the repeal of the law permitting Congressmen to send through the mails free of charge matter to which their signature is affixed. The plan should have universal approval. It will assist in placing postal costs where they belong and contribute to a reform of the present defective system of departmental accounting.

Because they don't have to pay anything for it, and because there is no way of ascertaining the extent to which they avail themselves of it, many Congressmen make an immoderate, illogical, wasteful use of the postal service. It is a graft, and perhaps the impression it causes is the more painful because it is a petty form of graft. It overloads the mails with valueless stuff in campaign times and floods the postal cars at times when the railroads' compensation is to be determined.

The new plan will preserve a free use of the postal facilities, but it will not be unlimited, stamps being furnished to a reasonable amount. Opportunities for abuse of the franking privilege have been so largely increased by the parcel post that the time has come for abolishing its graft features.

Mr. Shaw's new play, "Androcles and the Lion," introduces the world to the superleo.

PROTZMANN SHOULD ACT.

Councilman William L. Protzmann, as an honest man, cannot afford to hold his office under a cloud. Former City Counselor Walther has said Mr. Protzmann forfeited his office by entering into profitable business relations with firms whose interests were affected by legislation in which Councilman Protzmann participated.

The City Council has rescinded its resolution to investigate. The situation should not rest here. If the Council will not do its plain duty, Mr. Protzmann in his own behalf should demand an investigation.

East St. Louis has no "black book," like Hennessy's, but it is suspected that State's Attorney Webb has an interesting card index.

I. R. AND R. IN THE CHARTER.

St. Louis freeholders decided unanimously to include the initiative, referendum and recall in the new city charter. These measures for popular control of city affairs will offset the larger grant of authority proposed to be made to a more concentrated city government.

The people should be able to get an initiative election—to pass a law refused by the city government—on petition of not more than 7 per cent of the registered voters.

A referendum election—to approve or reject a law enacted by the city government—should be obtainable on petition of not more than 10 per cent of the registered voters.

A recall election—to dismiss a city official—should be made harder to get. Petition of not less than 20 per cent of the registered voters should be required. No official should be subject to recall during the first six months of his term.

The proposition to divide the city into three districts, for one of these special elections, is faulty. It reasserts the ward principle which St. Louis is trying to abandon in order to become consciously a civic whole.

The last time "the laziest man on earth" got out of bed was before our free bridge was started, and he died in the poorhouse of Jersey County, Illinois, without seeing it completed.

POE ON THE CROW FAMILY.

Jim, pet crow of a railroad construction camp at Big Eddy, Ore., was summarily put to death in defiance of Secretary Houston's certificate of character for crows generally. Jim used to steal every piece of soap he could find and deposit it in the railroad watering tank, putting locomotives out of business through "foaming." He stole torpedoes placed on the track as danger signals, accidents being narrowly averted in consequence. He pecked out the eyes of all the young poultry in the vicinity.

The raven is a member of the crow family and Poe indicted it as a "thing of evil. He used the words "bird" and "fiend" and "devil" indiscriminately in describing it. He said it was not only "ungainly," but "ghastly," also "gaunt" and "ominous." So far Poe seems to carry more weight with the public than the Department of Agriculture.

TENNESSEE JOURNALISM IN PARIS.

Ma foi! Pierre Loti is challenged! He stung the Bulgarians with his journalistic pen. The Bulgarian Lieutenant Torkof offers him the honor of a duel. Loti is over 60 years old. His pen is mightier than his sword. But other gallant Gauls will be delighted to fight Torkof and any other Bulgarians who are looking for trouble. Diable! We read:

> PARIS, Oct. 31.—Twenty or thirty duels are threatened in Paris. Nearly every Paris editor has expressed willingness to meet any Bulgarian editor who cares to come to Paris to demand reparation.

All the Bulgarian editors have blood in their eye, and everyone who has the price of the railroad fare is getting ready to start. There is going to be a fine time in Paris. It reminds us of early days in Tennessee when old Mark Twain was down there and journalism was in its prime. Editors dropped hand grenades down each other's stove pipes, and a brick smashing through a window meant only a mild exchange of editorial civilities. Editors packed navy revolvers and loved to salute each other with them. Remember Mark's faithful report of Col. Blatherskite Tecumseh's call on the editor of the Johnson County War Whoop?

> The Colonel appeared in the door a moment afterward with a dragoon revolver in his hand. He said: "Sir, have I the honor of addressing the poltroon who edits this mangy sheet?"
>
> "You have * * * I believe I have the honor of addressing the putrid liar," etc., etc. * * * Both pistols rang out their fierce clamor at the same instant. The chief lost a lock of his hair and the Colonel's bullet ended its career in the fleshy part of my thigh. The Colonel's left shoulder was clipped a little. They fired again. Both missed their men this time, but I got my share, a shot in the arm. At the third fire both gentlemen were wounded slightly, and I had a knuckle clipped. I then said I believed I would go out and take a walk, as this was a private matter and I had a delicacy about participating in it further * * * Then they talked about the elections and the crops while they reloaded, and I fell to tying up my wounds. But presently they opened fire again with animation, and every shot took effect—but it is proper to remark that five out of six fell to my lot. The sixth one mortally wounded the Colonel, who remarked, with fine humor, that he would have to say good morning now, as he had business up town. He then inquired the way to the undertaker's and left.

After the Bulgarians clean up the Parisian editors, we dare them to come over and wipe out their scores with some of the old school editors of the South. There are still plenty of brave journalists in Tennessee and even in Arkansas, and these men have criticised Bulgaria more severely than the Parisians ever dared to do.

For our part, we are great admirers of the Bulgarians, and we shall continue to respect and sympathize with them in future just as we have always done in the past. Vive Bulgaria!

NOVEMBER.

November gets its name from the Latin novem (nine), it having been the ninth month in the old Roman calendar. This brought Thanksgiving in at a time when there was nothing but oysters, and Numa moved the month along where the Thanksgiving dinner could include turkey and cranberries. He was promptly impeached, owing to the great strength of the Oyster Trust, and ran for a seat in the Senate from one of the bog districts on the cranberry issue. It was during this campaign, which was one of the bitterest in Roman history, that Numa, from whom we have numismatics, invented money. The opposition had no money, whereas Numa and his friends made all they wanted, and spent it lavishly. He was not only triumphantly elected, but also paid his private debts and swung some very fine deals in the Roman stock market. He became Speaker of the Senate, and was completely vindicated in the next general election, when he was chosen Emperor of Rome.

The festive calf will sniff the breeze
And do the hesitation waltz,
And the hardy doodlebug will sneeze
And clamor for the smelling salts.
The dogwood tree will blush for shame
Of soon becoming wholly nude,
The Democrats will bust a hame
To get the currency reviewed,
The crimson maple leaf will fly
With light abandon on the wind,
And the wild goose will go down the sky
With winter biting him behind.

The kind-faced cow will gently moo and don her heavy suit of plush, and the quarter, shouting to his crew, will bite and kick the center rush. The camphorated overcoat will render odorous the air, the women, clamoring to vote, will shout for Emmeline the fair, the cider press will lift its plaint from many rusty wheels and cogs, the farmer, in his red war-paint, will run amuck among his hogs, the robin redbreast will disport a moment in the autumn sky, and the populace will storm the fort three times a day for pumkin pie.

The golden beauty of the morn will dim the splendor of the rose, and the rooter, falling on his horn, will blow the buttons off his clothes. The hired man will stay abed until the farmer drags him out, the Argentine will whoop for Ted and blithely follow him about, the drys will grapple with the wets on many a fair and fickle field, the weather men will place their bets on what the season has revealed, the squirrel, in his leafy nest, will sort and pack his winter stores, and the cold northwind will do its best to catch a slit skirt out of doors.

The gentle blandishments of Fall will make the days divinely fair, and the young man running with the ball will hide it in his long back hair. The smell of chitlins will excite the crowd around the kitchen door, the pheasant, waking with the light, will fill the forest with his roar, the sorghum kettle will diffuse its subtle tonic on the breeze, the fool duckshooter will amuse himself contracting some disease, the hosts of Winter will advance, with Autumn well upon the run, and the plumber, home from Paris, France, will call assessment number one.

The turkey will begin to count
The days between him and the pan,
And the lustrous moon will softly mount
The starry arch of heaven's span.
The rash deer hunter will espy
The game at last and shoot his guide,
The hardy and unswatted fly
Will make its habitat inside;
The trailing vine that redly hung
Will lose its glorious estate,
And the cider keg will blow its bung
Through seven stories and the slate.

The first twenty-two days of November will be under the influence of Scorpio, the eighth sign of the zodiac. Persons born under the influence of Scorpio are very shrewd, and will know how to get out of paying their income tax.

The last eight days of November will be under the influence of Sagittarius the Archer, the ninth sign of the zodiac. Persons born under this sign are very optimistic, and think they will be able to pay their debts after the new currency law goes into effect.

The moon will be full on the 13th. Thanksgiving will be observed on the 27th, when Mrs. Pankhurst will leave the country. Jupiter will be evening star. Mr. Bryan will be at his desk. Mr. Roosevelt will end his lectures and begin to chase cougars up and down the Rio de la Plata about the 30th.

And then December will resume
With many a cold and wintry snap,
And Santa Claus will chase the gloom
And desolation off the map.

TO BOYS ON THE FARM.

Out in the meadow, green with grass,
A lad has turned into the lane.
Slowly he lets the cattle pass,
And locks the gate again.

Beneath the blue sky and over the hill,
Briskly he makes his way,
With a merry whistle that is never still
At the close of a summer's day.

"I am only a boy," he murmurs low;
But his mother had said to him,
"You're a mighty good boy to work so hard—
Your a mighty good boy, Jim."

Tears sprang into the young lad's eyes
As he gave his mother a kiss.
What if other boys have gone into the world,
Some have been led amiss!

"I'll stay with you mother, and work so hard—
No matter what might have been;
And I'll prove to the whole wide world," he said,
"Thats boys on the farm make men."

MR. SCHIFF'S GREAT PUBLIC SERVICE.

From the New York World.

Jacob S. Schiff has performed a great public service in coming forward with an outspoken defense of the administration's currency bill and demand for its speedy enactment with some amendment easily possible. He is amazed that Mr. Vanderlip of the City Bank should "completely reverse himself" within a week and present a plan which accentuates features he had most strongly opposed in the pending bill. He appears unable to understand why any other bankers should denounce a limited Government control in the one bill and welcome absolute Government control in the other; why what they called confiscation in the one is greeted as sound and necessary reform in the other; why regional reserve banks under their own control in the one bill should compel them to give up their national charters when branch banks without any control of their own are found acceptable.

As for himself, Mr. Schiff will have none of this playing fast and loose with a great public reform. He will incur no such "very great responsibility" for endangering currency legislation. "After having successfully settled the tariff," he, for one, will do nothing to keep the country away from this further reform, which in his opinion will bring to it "economic rest" for a long time to come.

Through marplots within Congress and scheming interests without, the American people have been half persuaded that the administration's bill is the impossible contrivance of ignorant conservatism and wild-eyed radicalism.

They now learn from the greatest banker in this country since the death of Mr. Morgan that it is a sound, practical measure. It needs no more amendment than can be easily agreed upon. The extent of the banking opposition has been exaggerated. The hypocrisy of that opposition has now been fully exposed. It scheming for ulterior ends can no longer deceive anybody.

The country wants that "economic rest," which Mr. Schiff predicts from this legislation. Its enactment at this session should become an irresistible public demand.

EXPERTS SEEING THINGS.

From the Springfield Republican.

It is astonishing what an expert can see in the banking and currency bill with the naked eye. Victor Morawetz of New York sees a currency contraction sufficient to make a panic, while Prof. Platt Andrew, secretary of the National Monetary Commission, was never surer in his life of anything that the bill as written involves inflation to the extent of a billion dollars. What are plain lawmakers to do when folks who know it all agree?

The Wheel

A CHRONICLE of the strange adventures of John Haynes and his weird vehicle.

6—THE ARM OF JUSTICE

HOW the Vengeance of John Haynes Fell Upon Judge Charteris.

By H. M. EGBERT.

IN his comfortable bachelor house in the Western Iowa town of Nokomis, Judge Charteris was seated in his armchair. But he was not seated as a Judge should sit, well poised and at ease, secure in the consciousness of his integrity and the approbation of his fellow men. Judge Charteris was huddled up and crouching forward, a drained glass of whisky and milk at his right hand, and at his left a hardly inhaled perfecto burning itself slowly away in an ashtray.

The Judge's face was an unhealthy yellow, touched here and there with streaks of livid white which gave it a curiously blotched appearance. And, in fact, the man was trembling upon the verge of a nervous breakdown.

He had returned that afternoon from the court in which he had earned a reputation for the severe sentences which he meted out to the wretched criminals who fell into the clutches of the law. There he exemplified the law's outraged majesty; but here he was nothing but a cowardly, weak, elderly man, with a whole life of evil and injustice stretching away behind him and the unknown future ever drawing more near.

The knowledge that his life was passing and that it had availed him nothing [illegible] hardy on him at times of introspection. But now the cause of his despair was more immediate. It lay upon the table, a sheet of paper taken from an envelope that had been posted in [illegible]ttsburg, which he had received some minutes before. In the inclosure were four words: "Your turn comes next," they said.

THE MESSAGE.

That was all; there was no signature—but he knew well what that message portended. When, five years previously, he had assisted in the Nokomis Land Co.'s nefarious scheme in return for a thousand shares in it, he had imagined that he could place his memories away and grind his conscience under foot, as he had done so many times.

John Haynes, the millionaire owner of the estates which the land gang had coveted, was an Englishman, ignorant of the law, the customs, and of the [illegible]. He had been torn from his [illegible] daughter, railroaded into the [illegible]ary for 14 years as Pete Tim[illegible] gang leader—and the gang [illegible] lands, those upon which Nokomis stood.

[illegible] years went by—five years of [illegible] and despair for Haynes. Then [illegible] in the penitentiary ma[illegible] where he invented a gyro[illegible] attachment which would propel [illegible] at an incredible rate of [illegible] he had escaped by means of it, [illegible] by one, was hunting down and [illegible] the men who had betrayed [illegible] dered him.

[illegible] them knew where the next [illegible] uld fall or who would be the [illegible]. Now here, now there, East, [illegible] South, John Haynes went [illegible] wind in some infernal contrivance propelled by his gyroscope. And [illegible] visit was followed by swift and [illegible] retribution.

[illegible] it been death alone that would [illegible] him, John Haynes might have [illegible] met by armed men; his victims [illegible] have taken heart and armored [illegible] and gone abroad like ar[illegible]. But the instinct of retribution [illegible] had become a mania with the [illegible] impelled him to deal his [illegible] blows with cunning and craft, [illegible] resulted in the penalty bearing a [illegible] or less appropriate resemblance [illegible] the crime committed by each of the [illegible]factors.

ANYTHING POSSIBLE.

Judge Charteris looked up. The light [illegible] dying out of the West, the desolate [illegible] stretched almost up to the [illegible]shold of his home. Charteris shud[illegible]. In such a land anything was [illegible]. He would flee, he would go [illegible] to warmer climes and leave no [illegible] behind him. The letter had been [illegible] only two days before. Surely, if [illegible] acted at once, he could yet contrive [illegible] elude that terrible vengeance.

[illegible] would leave no sign of his depart[illegible]. He would pack a couple of suit[illegible], rush East upon a special car to [illegible] Moines or Omaha and there vanish. [illegible] had been sold long since; [illegible] was salted away in banks in [illegible].

[illegible] abandoned everything in Noko[illegible], house, land, reputation, he [illegible] reach Florida with more than [illegible] thousand dollars in gold. [illegible], he could think of noth[illegible] do. And in Florida it was [illegible] like these desolate, snow[illegible] prairies.

[illegible] had his trembling hand out to [illegible]hone. "Give me Girouard, 57," [illegible] "Hello! Is that you, Mr. [illegible] This is Judge Charteris. I've got to go to Omaha at [illegible] private business. Private, mind [illegible] body must know. Can you get [illegible] special car inside two hours?"

[illegible] but the trains are stalled in [illegible]. Now if you wanted to [illegible] I could manage it, but"——

"I'll go West," cried Charteris, [illegible] at this conspiracy of [illegible] against him. "For God's [illegible] me a special car for any[illegible] Francisco, Portland, Los An[illegible]

[illegible] himself and Hopkins existed [illegible] of many years' standing. [illegible] born in infancy, when both [illegible] lawyers, it had been [illegible] through days of [illegible] importance, until it blossomed into a close league for mutual aid. In the end he arranged to go to Portland, Ore. Charteris knew that Hopkins would not betray him.

In a cluster of trees, perched upon the summit of the lone hill that dominated the town, John Haynes was watching the Judge's house, which stood on the outskirts of Nokomis, through a powerful field glass.

He knew that the letter would reach him when he left his court that afternoon. He had seen him enter the house, saw it blaze up with lights, and, in imagination, saw his enemy receive the blow.

He was seated in a strange-looking vehicle. It might have been described best as a runabout, but it was unlike any now on the market, for it was built like a farmer's cart, and as it snorted and puffed westward through the sparsely settled country it had excited great derision among the inhabitants, whose motor cars were always of the latest pattern.

But what the bucolics of Kansas and Nebraska did not know was that at night the four wheels were detached and placed within the vehicle, which, running upon a single wheel, driven by the gyroscope, outpaced the swiftest trains in its mad flight toward Nokomis.

In a blinding snowstorm John Haynes had brought his companion to their post on the top of the hill. The wheels were removed, the huge tank stored with gasoline; now they were waiting, comfortable enough in the warm and weather-proof interior, stocked as it was with food and even luxuries for road travel.

"He'll bolt," said Haynes, with conviction. "Tomorrow morning he will take a train eastward. I know the dog; he won't dare to wait to take his medicine."

Suddenly lights flashed through the gloom below them. Immediately afterward, borne across the stillness of the night air, came the chugging of a locomotive.

"He's going to bolt now!" John Haynes cried in exultation. "Theobald, your duty will soon be at an end."

"Thank God!" ejaculated the other forcibly, and, stooping down, he began to unroll a little surgeon's case in which were the instruments of his craft.

"You've done well, Theobald," said John Haynes, seating himself beside him. "And after tonight you can wipe me out of your memory. Reflect, man," he continued, placing his strong hands upon the other's shoulders, "you might have been in his situation tonight."

"It's a terrible job," said Theobald gloomily.

THE PREPARATIONS.

"All justice is terrible, doctor," answered the other. "But it is less terrible than crime. When you assisted the land gang to railroad me into the penitentiary, when you left me crippled and helpless with a treacherous bullet in my spine which you were bribed not to remove—was not that terrible?"

"I know—I know," Theobald muttered, uncorking the bottle of bichloride of mercury with which he was to sterilize his instruments.

"When I held you at my mercy," John Haynes pursued relentlessly, "I laid upon you two conditions. First, that you should cure me—and that you did. Second, that when I summoned you you should obey my call. You have obeyed—and after tonight you can forget the past; it will be atoned for and you shall never see me again."

"But this—this is the dream of a madman!" muttered the doctor. "It can't succeed."

"It will succeed, Theobald," answered Haynes sternly, "and by reason of its inherent justice, even though it may be as you say, a madman's dream. Perhaps I am mad—but I have suffered and I will exact justice to the uttermost."

He broke off and, taking up the glass, peered long and hard through it. An automobile was chugging in the road before Judge Charteris' house. Down at the station a heavy locomotive was revolving on the turntable, just visible as the two bright lights spun their circular course through the gloom. Haynes placed his hand upon the steering wheel.

"East or West, it is all one," he said. "Theobald, are you ready?"

The doctor folded up his instrument case, Haynes pressed a spring and the strange vehicle sped off through the darkness at a moderate rate, ran into the prairie, and returned toward the station by a different route. Outside the yards it stopped and Haynes descended. Now it could be seen that he was wearing a dark gray uniform, upon the breast of which was a pointed star. The station master came up to him.

"Taking a special out tonight?" asked Haynes.

ST. LOUIS' FIRST "TANGO TEA"

Sketched by Marguerite Martyn at the Planters Hotel on Thursday.

"And so it developed that the tango, the much maligned, is remarkable only as a series of difficult steps in intricate arrangement—nothing to fear in the way of hip movement, freak positions of the hands; no hint, in fact, of its tropical and Latin origin.

"If the tango was expurgated the castle walk was no less stately than a minuet or other dance of the 'good old days.' "—Marguerite Martyn.

"What's that to you?" the other retorted. His eyes fell on the badge. "Who are you?" he demanded.

"I'm the Sheriff of Blue River," answered John Haynes. "There's been an attempt at a holdup in the Blue Mountains. Logs were placed across the line, and the west bound limited was nearly derailed. Two bullets were fired and one went into the cab. It's believed to be the work of Clancy's gang.

EYED WITH SUSPICION.

"West bound, did you say?" exclaimed the other. "Why—why'—— He broke off and eyed the other suspiciously again. "I guess there won't be no holdups with this special," he answered grimly. "There's nothing worth plundering aboard of her and there'll be two armed men in the cab. Get that?"

"You seem to think I'm one of the thieves," remarked Haynes petulantly in the broad dialect of the West.

"Why," said the other candidly, "maybe you are and maybe you ain't. But there won't be no holdups on this special. Thanks!"

Haynes spun on his heel as though offended and re-entered the vehicle, which proceeded slowly westward along the road that ran for a short distance parallel with the embankment. About a mile from the station it ended in a deep gully, beyond which was nothing but flat prairie for 100 miles and a little more, until the steep ascent of the Blue Mountain range began. Haynes laughed grimly as they sped through the darkness.

"He's going West, then," he said. "It's lucky we had this old auto covered, Theobald, for it must be nearly zero outside. Keep up your courage, man; in two hours, or three at the outside, all will be over and you'll be on your way back to your comfortable house in Nokomis, as snug as though you'd never left your bed to answer my summons."

WAITING AT THE STATION.

They drew up the automobile and waited patiently, some distance from the road, in case the station master should send searchers for them. Three hundred feet from the embankment they would have escaped the observation of the most keen-eyed hunters in that darkness, and in the snow which fell steadily about them.

Meanwhile Judge Charteris, suitcases in hand, was waiting at the railroad station. He had driven his own automobile through the bitter weather and now stamped impatiently up and down the platform, waiting for the engine and car to come alongside. When it arrived he noticed the two guards beside the driver.

"Who are those men?" he asked sharply.

"Assistants," answered the station master. He would not arouse the Judge's fears by detailing the news of the holdup which he had received. With sure instinct he had discerned the lie that had been told him. He had no doubt that the two men were actually members of Clancey's gang sent to make observations.

But, being unarmed, he had prudently suffered them to withdraw. He had privately instructed the driver to keep a sharp lookout for obstacles upon the track. Only at one spot could such be placed, for the prairie stretched away, without a sign of a tree, clear to the Blue Mountains—and then on and on again until the foothills of the Rockies and the broad alkali plains confronted them.

At the Blue Mountains only, where the engine must slow down to surmount the hills, could any attempt occur. And the guards carried loaded rifles.

Judge Charteris knew nothing of any danger. His only danger he felt he had shaken off when he stepped into his warm, comfortable car. Hopkins had not forgotten his love of comfort.

Beside the sleeping berth was a table piled with magazines, a box of choice cigars, and a little case containing some of those liqueurs which the Judge dearly loved. When the train drew out of Nokomis he settled himself down in his chair, all fear forsaking him.

He meant to take ship at Portland for San Francisco under an alias; thence to double back on his tracks toward the south; possibly to cross into Mexico. His plans were not matured. Confident that he had outwitted his former victim, he placed his fears behind him.

He had no ties. He lived the luxuriant, selfish life of an elderly bachelor. To break new ground was easy. He had no qualms. He had meant to retire soon anyway. He felt that he had acted wisely in arriving at his decision to fly.

He had heard the name Clancy mentioned softly as he was about to step into the car, and the word sent a sudden flash of recollection through his brain. He remembered Clancy—that patient, easy-going, middle-aged man who had become involved in a lawsuit with the Nokomis Land Co. a year or two previously.

Clancy had been a power in Nokomis by reason of his large interests there and his unswerving honesty. It had been a stiff fight before the land gang trapped him. Judge Charteris shivered as he remembered how, when he sentenced him to 10 years in the penitentiary, Clancy had threatened him in court and denounced him as a tool of the confederates.

A PEACEFUL SLEEP.

Then had come the spectacular escape from prison; and the respectable, portly gentleman—a little like himself—had become an outlaw and the terror of the country. Yes, it was well that he had planned this flight.

The train rolled on. A blissful peace descended over Judge Charteris. He nodded his head and dozed, his repose deepened, soothed by the good whisky with which his friend Hopkins had supplied him. When he awakened, he had reflected, he would be speeding through the desert, miles from Nokomis. Had he not better undress and go to bed? Before he answered his own question he was snoring in his chair.

Behind the train, so close that it might almost have formed an integral part of it, John Haynes and Theobald were speeding in their one-wheeled automobile upon a single rail. And underneath the busy gyroscope hummed, ever so faintly.

Its tune accorded well with the Englishman's mind; it hummed as merrily as his own thoughts, and yet it soothed him with its monotonous murmuring. All the while the snow fell steadily. But the automobile ran through it snugly and comfortably; there was not the slightest jar or vibration.

When the train quickened its speed the vehicle did the same. It could have outpaced the train in a run of a hundred miles and met her half way back.

"We must be nearing the foothills of the Blue Mountains, Theobald," said John Haynes, half an hour later. "They stretch for forty miles or so before we enter upon the steepest grade at the head of Blue River. I think we'll make our preparations."

Theobald shivered and rose, grasping his instrument case. At that moment he felt like a man bewitched, helpless, hypnotized by the power of his terrible master.

Haynes slowed down to twenty miles, leaped the machine from the rail to the roadbed, and, putting on speed again, caught up with the vanishing train. Throwing back the hood of the runabout, he stood upon the step a moment in the pelting snow, ran alongside of the train, and flinging a rope noose, one end of which was fixed to his steering wheel, made the runabout fast. He leaped aboard the train, and standing on the back platform, he strained at the rope, worked it until the runabout shifted her course, caught the rail again and ran on smoothly behind. Then, at his signal his companion leaped aboard, instrument case in hand.

To force the door of the car was the work of a few moments. Then the two men crept cautiously inside.

Judge Charteris was sleeping profoundly in his chair, his drained glass by his side, his hands folded across his abdomen and a smile of perfect happiness upon his face. He did not stir as they approached, but snored in drunken slumber.

Haynes took the cigar box from the table, selected a perfecto, lit it, and began to smoke. The doctor shook his head nervously when his companion offered him one. He was agog to finish his work and be gone.

HIS PLANS.

Haynes smiled indulgently, and seeing that Theobald was almost overcome by the tension, opened his case and drew out the bottle of chloroform. He crumpled up his handkerchief, saturated it, and clapped it over the Judge's face.

A sigh, a stir—and then the Judge's breathing deepened and became stertorous and slow. A deathly pallor began to overspread his face. When Haynes removed the handkerchief at last he lay profoundly still.

"How long will it last?" asked John Haynes coolly.

"Fifteen minutes," said Theobald, wringing his hands.

"That will be time enough?"

"Ample."

"Then get to work."

He turned aside and seating himself in the chair, took up a magazine and read. Inside he saw a picture of his gyroscope attached to an invalid chair.

"The devil-chair," the editors had captioned it, and Haynes read the article with a quiet chuckle. It was right in its statements, embodying as it did the principle of the gyroscope correctly. But it did not mention the device by which Haynes had attached it to the gasoline engine which controlled it; nor had the author the least conception of the personality of this "devil of crime," as he quaintly depicted him.

Haynes was glad of these things, for as long as the nature of his contrivance remained unknown he felt secure from capture, and with his own scheme unguessed at, he could be sure of success. None of the land gang would dare to reveal the story.

Above the rattle of the train he heard the fussy, panting breathing of his ally as he moved to and fro, busy about his work. Suppose he should assault him with his instruments or tie a chloroform wrapped cloth round his own face, he thought—and smiled. He did not turn his head. He was a judge of men.

"It's finished," said Theobald, 15 minutes later, and Haynes arose. At the first sight he started back in sheer amazement; then laughed uproariously at the grim humor of the situation.

For Theobald had done his work too well. The sight of the face of his old enemy had filled Haynes with scarcely controllable anger; but now—it was a different man.

For Theobald had almost bloodlessly made deft little cuts in certain facial muscles which made the cheeks hang flabby and loose; he had touched tiny muscles about the eyes and eyelids which had altered the whole aspect of the Judge's face, he had filled in the sagging flesh under the eyes with paraffin, even now hardening and not distinguishable from healthy tissue; he had given an upward turn to the eyebrows and a scowling droop to the mouth; and lastly he had snipped one infinitely small muscle in the sclerotic membrane of the eye which made Charteris' eyes, when the lids were lifted, diverge extravagantly.

And Clancy had a pronounced squint of just that character. Theobald had done his work too well.

"Now come, there is no time to lose," said Haynes, with gusty anger. "Wait there and hold him if he attempts to wake."

He stepped out on the platform of the car, pulled in the lagging runabout, and bending down drew out a bundle of clothes and a mud-caked painter's brush, which he moistened in the snow outside the car.

They stripped Judge Charteris of his clothes, which they threw into the runabout, and attired him in the bundle of filthy rags which they had taken with them for just such a purpose. Then they besprinkled his face and hands with mud from the brush, stepped back, and watched him critically. Before them lay the filthiest tramp that ever begged for alms.

THE JUDGE AWAKENED.

Outside a flash of light lit up the gloom and disappeared behind them. The train ran through the station and began to ascend a grade.

"That must be the Blue River," said Haynes, pointing out into the darkness. "This is the steepest grade of the line. At the top we uncouple her. Wake him, Theobald."

The doctor shook the sleeping man. Slowly the Judge's eyes unclosed. He stared at the two with vacancy; presently a gleam of intelligence came into his face.

"Wh—who are you?" he gasped, rising and staggering toward them.

John Haynes, standing facing him, his back against the mirror which was fixed on the wall of the compartment immediately opposite the sleeping berth, looked at the shaking man quizzically.

"You don't know me, Judge Charteris?" he asked.

Charteris stared at him in horror, raised his hand to his head, and tottered backward into the arms of Dr. Theobald.

"Merciful God!" he gasped and let his hands fall to his sides like a paralytic.

"You got my letter, Judge Charteris?" continued Haynes, eyeing him more sternly. "You ought to know me, since you consigned me to the hospitality of the State for 14 years."

The Judge staggered forward again. He passed his hand across his face; he still seemed dazed.

Haynes moved aside and let him see his reflection. In the mirror a wretched tramp, mud splashed and ragged, stared back at Charteris.

The Judge shook his head like a bull, went near, made motions with his hands and arms, and suddenly, with a fearful cry collapsed insensible at Haynes' feet. The train was moving at no more than eight miles an hour, for the engine was puffing near the summit of the hill. From his post in the cab the engine driver was watching the track for obstacles, while the two armed guards shivered and clapped their arms across their breasts.

Noiselessly Haynes crept to the front platform, leaped to the ground and reached for the couplings. His task was one which few men could have accomplished. But in the loneliness of the penitentiary Haynes had developed the muscles of his right arm into those of a giant, before he had invented his machine, and while he yet dreamed of physical vengeance upon his enemies. As the train poised itself upon the top of the hill, almost immovable, waiting to make the downward plunge, Haynes uncoupled the engine and leaped back into the car.

PLANS OF CHARTERIS.

The engine leaped forward, freed of the car, and raced wildly down the long slope which dipped toward the alkali country. For half a dozen miles nothing could stay her flight. It would be half an hour before she could snortingly puff backward to the summit again, and then the car, rushing backward along that swift descent, would lie buried beneath the waters of the Blue River that would receive her when she left the track at the turn below.

But that was not yet to be. For barring the way, buzzing like a bee, the little gyroscope runabout nobly bore up against the weight of the descending car. Had the latter obtained more impetus before encumbering her, the runabout would have been crushed like an eggshell, broken though never moved from her place until her frame sprang into fragments.

But now, with this slow, dead weight leaning against her breast, the gyroscope only hummed and crooned its song of victory; and there they clung, the car and the motor car, locked in that struggle in which neither could gain a yard. The car stood still.

Haynes took the unconscious judge by the arms and dragged him off the car into the snow. The fall had ceased; the cold was terrible upon the mountains. It might have been 25 below zero, it might have been more. The rags which the Judge wore might as well have been wrappings of straw.

The fearful cold penetrating to the bone, roused him from his faint. Haynes pulled him to his feet and, propping him against the platform of the car, stood over him.

"Once there was a corrupt Judge," he said with slow and terrible precision. "Sworn to do justice and uphold the law, he plundered the poor, pillaged the strong, and wrought injustice. Once, in the loneliness of a cell to which he had consigned him, one of the victims swore to kill that man, whose name was Charteris. And having so sworn he would not break his oath.

"But Charteris has outwitted him," Haynes continued to the cowering Judge. "He died before his victim's vengeance fell. He died in that car, 10 minutes ago, in a drunken slumber. And so his victim's vengeance has been rendered useless and all h's schemes of no avail.

"But in his place stands one who is soon to learn what Charteris taught so many other poor souls who stood before him, confident in the honor and majesty of the law which he betrayed. It is Dan Clancy who now waits here in the place of Charteris to receive his punishment.

"That punishment will be life imprisonment, for it was he who killed Judge Charteris, and in this State, by lucky chance, there is no capital punishment Clancy," he continued, with an abrupt change of manner, "you can live half an hour, and not much more, in this temperature. In half an hour the guards who are now on that engine will be back. Make yourself known to them and they will spare you, feed you, and convey you to a place where you will never be cold again."

I'M CLANCY.

He left the man in the snow and stepped into the runabout. With a turn of the wheel and pressure of the spring, he backed her, steered her from the path of the released car, and guided her to the roadbed just as the latter, freed from its support, rolled forward.

It sped on down the grade, gathering momentum, till the roadbed vibrated, rattled onward and downward, the noise of its progress growing fainter and fainter till only the least sound remained. Above, the watcher waited in breathless silence. There came a crash, a roar from far below; then the splash of a cascade of water.

The train car lay fathoms deep in the swift-moving, icy waters of the Blue River.

"Come, Theobald," said John Haynes. But even as the car leaped forward screams echoed from behind and a figure came running over the snow. It shrieked with idiotic laughter, and gesticulated and danced.

"I'm Clancy!" it cried in mirth, and clapped its hands. "I've killed Judge Charteris."

The rear lights of the returning engine flashed over the hill. Guided by the sounds the guards came hurrying along the track to where the mad man danced.

HOW I GOT MY FIRST RAISE.

CORRECTION.—Mr. Thomas M. McCorkell of 5891 Minerva avenue, St. Louis, feels aggrieved about a letter printed in this column some days since and bearing a name only slightly different from his own. It was evidently written by some joker, and the Post-Dispatch regrets its publication and is convinced that it was a forgery.

ON A BLUFF.

I got a job cleaning up around a new building at $1.50 per day. In about six days I finished. The boss wasn't there, but the foreman said he expected him any minute. I asked if he had anything I could do until the boss came. He said: "Can you lay floor?" I had seen some laid, so I told him "Yes." He let me use his tools.

I was working like a good fellow when the boss came. He said: "Well, are you a carpenter?"

"Yes, sir," I said.

"Well, I didn't know that. Why didn't you tell me before? I've been needing one."

I didn't tell him that I didn't know it before either. One evening we finished the floor and the foreman said: "Can you shingle?"

"Yes, sir," I said.

"Well, bring your shingling hatchet in the morning."

I went to a second-hand store and bought one that had been used, so it wouldn't look suspicious, and, to my surprise, on the next payday I was paid at the rate of $4 per day. I worked for him three years then came to St. Louis and went to work for C. L. Gray Construction Co. on the Coliseum at 60 cents per hour.

THE OLD BOSS DID IT.

After working a week for [illegible]r. C——, the gentleman by whom I was employed a year previous called on Mr. C. and, passing my desk, shook hands and asked how long I had been there. I thought Mr. C. would naturally ask Mr. R. about my ability, and therefore reasoned that I would soon be out of a position, as Mr. R. had always seemed so cross and hard to please, by myself in particular.

Later the president called me into his office and said, "I have decided to (I wanted to put my hands over my ears) raise your salary $5." I was too astonished to answer, but looked the question "Why?"

He said, "Because I think you are worth it."

Later I ran into Mr. R. on the street and he told me he had congratulated Mr. C. on securing my services, saying "I told him you were worth $5 just to have in the office, as your cheerfulness at all times and willingness to help in any department set a good example and we wished you would come back, as you sure were a hard worker." It was thus I got the raise.

I was glad then I had not shirked my work, although often I had been tempted to

DID MORE THAN WAS ASKED.

I commenced work two years and six months ago. I began by studying and learning my work; learning what was expected of me. I did not stop there, but tried to do more than was asked.

"CLASS CONSCIOUSNESS."

I came to this country nine years ago, with the sun in my eyes and 15 centuries of inherited respect to the Powers That Be in my heart. To get my first raise I toiled like a mule, qualed like a lackey in bondage, hoped like a miserable little beast of a rat swimming in a barrel of water with its eyes lifted up to the light—and got half of what I expected.

By that policy, nowever, I got raises with at least endurable slowness, but since I adopted that inescapable upstart feeling of equality that gets the man in America, I have remained dormant in a class—the unchanging, unproductive class of clerks.

A SOLDIER'S STORY.

On Jan. 6, 1899, I went to work for one of the smallest paint houses in St. Louis, but now one of the biggest, at $6.50 a week, and I just took one week to prove to my employer that I was worthy of a raise, as I had just come back from that beautiful park that so many of St. Louis boys helped to make, which is now called Chickamauga Park, while serving in the First Missouri Regiment.

It will be 15 years on the 12th of January since I received my first raise. I am still with that firm, and am receiving three times that much at present, so you see that it pays to do your work well, and be sure that the boss takes notice of what you are doing for the interest of the business.

I will never forget my first raise, as my boss that I started with, has passed to that beautiful land above.

GOT ANOTHER POSITION.

When I first started to work last June I only made $4 a week. One day I played sick and got another position for $6.50. H. KERN.

WAS GOING TO QUIT.

Some years ago I was employed as a delivery boy. One evening as I was starting home from work, my employer told me that he had been informed that day that I was driving the team too fast. I knew that I had always been careful with the team, and I told him that if he hadn't confidence in me, and really thought I abused his horses, he had better get him a boy that he could trust.

He seemed surprised at the way I addressed him, and said: "Oh, you are all right." But I was hurt, and insisted on quitting. He finally said: "If you will stay I will raise your wages $1 on the week." I stayed.

W. STRUT,

PLANNED AND STUDIED.

I got my first raise by working systematically and industriously. I worked from the time I got there till the time I went home.

I planned and studied daily what to do, and how to use every hour of the next day.

The manager saw I was as much interested in my work as he was in his. In my third pay envelope I found a raise. M. A., St. Louis.

OVER OLDER MEN.

Eight years ago I started working for a railway company as yard clerk. I was working extra, and learned the various positions, and got the first vacancy for a permanent position.

I had been employed only one year when the chief yard clerk called me into his office and asked me if I would like to take the night chief clerk which was a raise of $15 per month. I told him there were others older in his employ than I. He told me that he had been watching my work, and that I was cool-headed, always punctual and never refused to work a few minutes after quitting time. He said he had confidence in me, and that was the sort of man that he wanted in that position.

I took the position, and worked for his interest as well as my own, and that was my first step to success.

While I was working at the shoe factory I could never make over $4 a week.

I answered the same and got a positon and am now making $6 a week. IRENE KELLY,

By W. J. O'Connor.

Today's game with Tulane University, although having absolutely no bearing on any championship race, will be of vital importance to the delapidated St. Louis U. machine. Unless a victory is credited to the Billikens, they can have only small hope of winning a joust this season, the most disastrous in seven at the blue and white school.

A victory this afternoon may prove the turning point for better in the Billiken camp. It may inspire the players with enough confidence to brace them up for the final half of the season, when the heavy teams of Creighton, Marquette and Syracuse will be met. A defeat by the comparatively light Tulane eleven will, on the other hand, further demoralize a team that already is squeaking in every joint.

Full Team in Field.

Assistant Coach Elmer Smith, who has been to bat all week in place of Dennie, disabled, will have the strongest possible lineup in the field, putting up the most formidable front of the year. The players have worked hard for the past three days and with Murphy, Carroll and Harrison on the job prospects are not as gloomy as they have been in the past.

Thoele probably will start the game at quarter, with Carroll and Thomas on deck for relief duty. The regular linemen, from tackle to tackle, will be in their respective berths, while several players may be tried out at the wing positions.

C. B. C. Meets Tough Foe.

C. B. C. will meet no mean foe in De Paul of Chicago at Robison Field, this afternoon. The Windy City eleven gave the local collegians a scare, last season, and comes to town this year improved. However, C. B. C., with the addition of Ratican and Shea, also is strengthened and a rattling fast game is looked for.

Last Saturday the speedy college back field rolled up a top-heavy count of 56—6, proving that it has a scoring "punch." Again this afternoon Coach Kelly will send his men into the arena with instructions to make as many touchdowns as possible.

The lineup:

C. B. C.	Positions.	De Paul U.
Quinn	Right end	McCarthy
Diver	Right tackle	Devenny
Loeffler	Right guard	Wondrack
Menges	Center	A. Ward
C. Spoma	Left guard	Geiger
W. Eisman	Left tackle	Fish
McGinnis	Left end	Hart
Murphy	Quarterback	C. Ward
Ratican	Right halfback	Fingal
Shea	Left halfback	Clinnin
White	Fullback	Shanley

Joe Leslie Bush, the young Athletic twirler, who won one game from the Giants in the world's series, was beaten by every team in the American League this season. Even the Browns took a fall out of him. He was beaten three times each by the Naps, Nationals and Yanks, twice each by the Red Sox and White Sox, and once each by the Browns and Tigers.

New York Cast-Offs Not Wanted.

CHRISTY MATHEWSON joins the mob of baseball prophets when he virtually predicts that McGraw and the St. Louis Club will come to terms in the matter of trading for Ed Koney, the Cardinals' dissatisfied first sacker.

Positive information will probably not be obtainable until the annual meeting; when it is forthcoming we hope Christy and others prove false prophets, for two reasons:

1. Whatever John McGraw lets go has been squeezed dry, beforehand.
2. Players coming to St. Louis from New York are sure to be discontented and lose effectiveness.

• • •

None Worth Having.

THERE are three classes of players McGraw would let go, at present, he having no surplus in any particular department: Undeveloped men, whom he has been trying to make into major leaguers, like Jim Thorpe; boneheads and players who do not stand up in the pinch, and sulkers.

None of these is a desirable asset, even under favorable conditions. Coming to a tail-end city from a pennant town, where they will receive criticism instead of adulation and sloppy praise, thee chance of any traded material performing up to standard is slim.

HUGGINS WILL LET GO A STAR TO SECURE A BUNCH OF QUESTIONABLE SECOND-RATERS BY ANY TRADE WITH JOHN McGRAW.

FEDERAL LEAGUE'S FATE IN BALANCE AT MEETING TODAY

"Show Me" Gathering Must Either Put Up, or Shut Up for All Time.

By Clarence F. Lloyd.

Federal League club owners will be asked to "put up or shut up" at the annual meeting of that organization scheduled in Indianapolis, today. It is predicted by some of the magnates that the first bomb of a war on organized baseball will be sounded at this gathering. Others contend that when it comes time for the Federals to put up their money to finance the big deals, the younger club owners will back down.

The St. Louis, Kansas City and Baltimore stockholders have been making most noise. They say that they are willing to do their share of the fighting against the major League club owners, if the other magnates of the Federal League show their teeth.

The St. Louis club will be represented at the meeting by President E. A. Steininger of the local team, and Henry W. Laumeier, one of the stockholders. Otto F. Stifel, the principal "angel," was unable to accompany the others.

Parks, Not Players, Cause Worry.

The St. Louis club owners say that they are willing to spend any amount of money to hire ballplayers from organized teams. Their principal worry is over the selection of a site for a park.

George Stovall, deposed manager of the Browns, was in St. Louis Friday. He stopped off here on his way to Indianapolis, where he will represent the Kansas City club at the Fed. meeting.

Stovall hasn't signed to manage the Porkers, but states he has come to terms with the club owners.

Stovall says that if the other cities are as enthusiastic as Kansas City, the Federal League will be a success. He claims that the men interested in the club there are wealthy and will not hesitate in spending money to procure ball players.

It is by offering liberal three-year contracts that Stovall hopes to persuade players from the major leagues to "jump" to the Federals. He has pointed out to the Federal League magnates that they can afford to give the players large salaries, as they will have to pay out no money for purchasing the athletes.

"It isn't the intention of the club owners to go after men like Cobb, Speaker, Johnson or Mathewson," said Stovall while in St. Louis. "They are going after the mediocre players, young men who are not now drawing large salaries, but who will jump at the prospect of earning $5000 a season.

"If the club owners give the men three-year contracts and put the money in the bank, I believe they will have no trouble in getting talent.

Players to Be "Free Agents."

"Another feature about the Federal League that appeals to the ball player is the fact that at the end of three years they will be declared free agents and permitted to sign with the club that offers the best inducements for their services at that time. That gives the player a chance to take a new lease on life."

Stovall said he had discussed the Federal League question with one or more players of every team in the two big leagues, including members of the Giants-White Sox party, which is to tour the world. All the ballplayers are in favor of the new league, said Stovall.

"The general attitude is 'If you can get me a healthy increase over what I am now drawing, and have the money put in the bank, consider me as good as signed,'" said Stovall.

President Steininger of the St. Louis club and Lloyd H. Rickart of St. Louis, secretary of the Federal League, seem to have the inside track for the job as president of the league.

The session of the Federal Leaguers will probably extend over Sunday.

Indoor Teams to Play.

The Central "Y" indoor baseball team takes on the United Railways in the Central gymnasium Saturday evening. The Central team defeated the fast Rock Church aggregation last Saturday. A series of three games with the Concordia Turners will be played in December. Teams are requested to write C. M. Patten at Central Y. M. C. A. for games.

Badgers Favored to Beat Gophers; East to Meet West at Ann Arbor

Semi-finals in the Western Intercollegiate Conference, four battles in the Missouri Valley territory and interest in three inter-sectional contests, held the center of the stage today in middle-western football.

The semi-finals between Chicago and Illinois at Chicago, and Minnesota and Wisconsin at Madison, attracted the most of the pre-game attention.

Wisconsin supporters seem to be in the majority. Confidence, which has been growing all week among followers of Coach Juneau, was augmented by the announcement Friday of a fight by Minnesota alumni against Dr. Williams, coach of Minnesota.

In Des Moines, Drake and Washington, the two fastest, but not the two most powerful teams in the valley conference, met in their annual tilt of speed. Drake entered the game without the services of its regular back field, the veterans giving over the attempt to defeat Washington to pony backs, all with sprinting records.

Missouri staged its play today against the team of its own mining engineering department from Rolla, the Miners today being represented by a strong and well-balanced team. Missouri planned to hold some of its injured stars out of the game, in the hope of saving them for its three remaining Missouri Valley contests.

Outside of the Missouri Valley, the Haskell Indian team fresh from a near victory over Nebraska, pitted itself against Creighton.

Michigan, which has borne the standard of the West against the East the last two seasons, met the first of its Eastern opponents on Ferry Field. So many changes have been made in the Michigan team since the defeat at the hands of the Michigan Aggies that the team which met Syracuse could hardly be recognized as the one which played on the same field two weeks ago.

The other West-East contest was staged at West Point, where the Army eleven met Notre Dame. The other intersectional game was a North and South contest, St. Louis University lining up against the team of Tulane University.

The ambition of the Kansas Jayhawkers in the Missouri Valley Conference football fight met a setback when the Kansans were beaten by the Oklahoma team in Norman, Ok., Friday, 21—7. The result was quite a surprise, inasmuch as the Sooners had lost to Missouri. Three touchdowns were tallied by Oklahoma before the Jayhawkers, thanks to a forward pass, scored in the last period.

Vanderbilt and Virginia teams will furnish the stellar football attraction in the South today. They play at Charlottesville, Va. Georgia Tech and Sewanee will have it out at Atlanta, while other important games scheduled are: Auburn vs. Louisiana State, at Mobile, and North Carolina vs. Georgia, at Athens, Ga.

The Ferguson A. C. team and the Webster Groves Independents will play for the independent championship of St. Louis County, at Hibernian Park, Ferguson, Saturday.

Cross-Country Run Planned.

Plans are being made for a four-mile cross-country run for high school teams Thanksgiving day. The proposed route is from a point on the Natural Bridge road to the St. Louis U. campus, where the Soldan-Central football game will be played. Soldan and Central have cross-country teams, but there is some doubt about the entry of teams from McKinley and Yeatman.

SPORT SALAD by L. C. DAVIS

LINES TO A PUNK HITTER.

HE lived amidst untrodden ways
That lead to second base;
A man whom there was none to praise—
A dead one in the race.

The pitcher had him on his staff
And, oh, how sad to state!
He handed him the merry laugh
Whene'er he toed the plate.

His efforts vain, his movements slow,
The future dark and dim,
He couldn't hit the ball and, oh,
The difference to him!

Injuries to Keep Harvard Stars Out of Cornell Game
Yale Is Fast Improving

Both Big Elevens Favored to Defeat Opponents in Gridiron Feature Struggles in the East Today—Eli's Showing Should Forecast Team's Future.

By Herbert Reed.
The Post-Dispatch's Eastern Football Representative.

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 1.

HARVARD will take the field against Cornell this afternoon without Mahan, the Crimson's best allround back, and Hitchcock, the aggressive tackle. It may be, too, that O'Brien, the best end on the Harvard squad, will not be allowed to enter the game, although this is far from certain.

This means a distinct impairment of Harvard's individual strength, although so much improvement has been made in the team work recently, and so well have the backfield second-string men progressed that there is every prospect the Crimson will be closer to a first-class football machine today than it has been at any time this season.

Logan, who has finally displaced Freedly in the quarterback station, has come along very fast and the entire play is smoother than it has been since the close of last fall's campaign. Neither Mahan's nor Hitchcock's injury is so serious as to keep either man out of the Princeton game.

The Crimson lineup today probably will include Coolidge at left end, Withington at left tackle, Cowen at left guard, Trumbull at center, Pennock at night guard, Gilman at right tackle and Storer at right end. The quarter will be Logan, with Brickley or Bradlee and Hardwick also behind the line.

Open Game Expected.

There is every apparent intention to make much of the running game against the Ithacans, when opportunity offers, as Bradlee will be used for heavy line breaking, with Battle in reserve should his predecessors fail to make the required ground.

Very little time has been spent in scrimmaging, recently, but the coaches have driven the team so that the eleven has been welded together, with the result that smooth play is expected, unless the Harvard forwards find trouble in handling the Ithaca line. Harvard is very aggressive—too much so, in fact, as was proven in the game with Pennsylvania State College, when penalties were meted out to Harvard thick and fast for illegal use of the hands, an infringement of the rules that has been much in evidence this season. Nevertheless the charging offense has shown remarkable progress, although the men are undoubtedly playing too high.

Indeed, it is difficult to see how the Crimson forwards will be able to withstand an opposing line that boasts of a low, hard drive without giving up a great deal of ground, from time to time. Harvard's line men have been sitting on their heels a great deal this season, and it has been noticeable upon the few occasions that the visiting eleven was able to show fairly strong opposition that it was quite possible to play the Cambridge front rank to a standstill.

Gilman a "Find."

Gilman, whose appearance at tackle has made it possible to move Storer out to the end, has made perhaps the best impression of the week from the viewpoint of the line coaches, and it is to the combined blocking by Storer and Gilman that much of the success of the sweeping end runs of Mahan has been attributed. For that reason the running game doubtless will be continued by Harvard today, when every opportunity offers, as it will be possible to tell then whether Harvard has another back anywhere near Mahan's class in this type of play.

Although Harvard seems to be coming along nicely as a team, it must be remembered that the Crimson has met nothing like serious opposition in some time, and although Harvard is a top-heavy favorite against the Ithacans, those close to the Crimson are far less confident of anything like a walk-away than the general run of the team's suporters.

There are few other games of major importance today. Probably the most serious clash is that between Colgate and Yale at New Haven. Colgate has shown a consistently strong team this year—a team with a good line and an exceedingly strong and fast set of backs, who use the shift behind the line with speed and precision. It is about time that the Yale forwards showed something of their real ability, and the Colgate game offers an excellent opportunity.

I am inclinded to have a greater faith in the possibilities of the Yale eleven than public performances have seemed to warrant; but it is nearly, if not quite, time to take stock.

To show what the Elis can do, they should beat Colgate by at least three scores. Anything less than that would mean that Yale was dangerously slow to realize on assets that are perfectly plain on the surface.

On the defense, backsliding is hardly to be expected, but the attack ought to begin to have some "whip" right now.

American League Proved Better Drawing Card Than Its Old Rival

WHILE Barney Dreifuss, president of the Pittsburg club, says that the National League had one of the poorest seasons of its existence in 1913, President Ban Johnson of the American League announces that the junior organization experienced its most successful year, financially, since it was founded.

According to Johnson, the attendance at the games in 1913 was one-third of a million more than in any previous campaign. The scrappy Nationals, under the leadership of Clark Griffith, attracted most fans on the road. It's great to have a fellow like Walter Johnson on your team.

Walter Leverenz, the Browns' star southpaw, hooked up with Christy Mathewson for the second time in a week Friday and again put it over "Big Six." The score was 9—3, the Giants getting all their runs in one inning. The Sox found Matty for 14 hits. Only five were made off the Brownie. The game was played in Dallas, Tex.

Owner Charley Ebbets of the Brooklyn club will remain in control of the Newark (International League) team. Efforts were made by Newark business men to purchase Ebbets' interests but held that the $187,000 valuation placed on the shares was too great.

While President Jim McAleer of the Red Sox is touring the world with the Giants and White Sox the task of signing several balky members of the ex-world's champions will fall to Secretary Robert McRoy of the Boston club. McAleer has heard that several of his players will hold out for increases, but doesn't intend to postpone the tour to bicker with the athletes.

Manager Johnny Evers of the Cubs fears that the players, backed up by the Baseball Fraternity, will make a wholesale demand for increased salaries next season. He sides against the players, saying that they are treated more liberally now than in the past. He cites the fact that when he broke into the game in 1902 he received $1350.

When Tom Lynch, president of the National League, was told that the job as head of the Federal League awaited him, he laughed and then laughed some more. He also admitted that the position had not been officially offered to him.

Soldan eliminated McKinley. The Enders now have almost clear sailing title, the one remaining game bein Central on Thanksgiving day.

Soldan had a slight advantage in and completely outclassed their foes. C Archie Klein ran his team well, mixing attack in the early period until he had game safely salted. He then reverted straight football, so as not to uncover many of his team's trick plays.

POST-DISPATCH'S DAILY RECORD OF MARKETS AND FINANCE

[B]y Leased Wire From the New York Bureau of the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—The Evening [P]ost, in its copyrighted financial review, [to]day says:

"With London's market closed and, [th]erefore, with no initiative from [a]broad; with yesterday's 10 per cent [ca]ll money rate still a mystery, and [w]ith the possibility of highly important [de]velopments in our Mexican relations [ov]er Sunday, it was natural that the [S]tock Exchange should today have virtually stopped doing business.

"Transactions were wholly insignificant and change of prices negligible.

"It is perhaps a fact of some importance that the market should, under such conditions, have been merely apathetic and most weak; but this reflected what has from the first [be]en Wall street's attitude towards [th]e Mexican imbroglio.

"There has been a continuous re[fu]sal to regard that situation, desperate though it has certainly [se]emed to be in a political sense, as [a] possible dominating influence on [th]e financial position.

"This is in spite of the insistent [de]claration by the European markets [th]at it ought to be such an influence. [Bu]t Europe—London in particular—[ha]s long since fallen into a state of [mi]nd where it is mostly busy hunting for facts or inferences, which [w]ill make its own financial despondency more profound.

London Is Gloomy.

"There are times when communi[ti]es in such a mood grow angry over [an]ything like a cheerful prophecy—a [fa]ct very clearly evidenced by the [fa]ilure of Lombard street to take any [in]terest in the lower Berlin Bank [ra]te.

"This financial atmosphere at London is an influence with which our [o]wn financial market will still have [to] reckon, during the next two [m]onths.

"It may possibly prevent any fur[th]er gold engagements for New York [at] London. It will probably force the [Ba]nk of France to suspend its pres[en]t seemingly superfluous operations [in] the international gold market.

"After that, if nothing of really [se]rious import lies below the surface [of] affairs in London—and no one al[[illegible]]es such a fact—then Lombard [str]eet should begin to pluck up cour[age].

"In view of yesterday's sharp advance [in] call loan rates, today's weekly bank [sta]tement was awaited with more than [ordi]nary interest.

"The week-end figures showed an un[usu]ally large decrease in actual sur[plus] reserves, due partly to the loan [ex]pansion incident to the November [pay]ments, but also to a $7,400,000 re[port]ed loss in cash, which is wholly at [vari]ance with the known facts of this [wee]k's movement of reserve money at [the] banks.

"[T]hese figures certainly suggest that [the] showing must be in considerable [mea]sure the result of bookkeeping [chan]ges at the banks, whose total foot[ing] frequently confuses a report made [[illegible]]st day of a month.

[[illegible]] remains to be seen. Its re[sult] so far as concerned the bank [statem]ent itself, was a deficit in re[serve] for all reporting institutions, [and] a surplus of only slightly over [[illegible]],000 for the banks alone."

[DET]AILED REPORT OF DAY'S [W]ALL STREET TRANSACTIONS

[NE]W YORK, Nov. 1.—There was not [[illegible]] business on hand at the opening today [to give] the market a semblance of life. Less [than] 7000 shares changed hands in the first [[illegible]] minutes. Fluctuations were slight, with [an e]asier tendency.

[Asi]de from a drop of a point in Canadian [Pacifi]c the only movement of consequence [was a] break of 3 points in Mexican Petro[leum], which extended its loss of the last two [days] to 10 points. The stock sold at 54, a [ne]w low record.

[Spec]ulation was so entirely perfunctory that [[illegible]]ement in a particular stock in no way [[illegible]]d to the course of the general market [[illegible]]ced an influence on sentiment.

[[illegible]]s the list, after sagging slightly, re[[illegible]] its trend when supporting orders ral[lied M]exican Petroleum 4 points to 58.

[The] market closed steady. Operations in [[illegible]] today were unusually restricted, even [for Sa]turday. Traders were reluctant to take [ne]w lines until the market for call funds [[illegible]]d to a normal basis, following yester[day's] squeeze. Bonds were steady.

Coal Trade Irregular.

The Black Diamond, in its issue of Saturday, says:

"East of the Allegheny Mountains and west of the Mississippi River, the weather is just a little soft and the coal market is only holding steady and not being very strong. In the Middle Western territory, however, the weather has been cool, the buying has been extensive, and in addition the car shortage is a factor, especially in Ohio, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. The cold weather and the car situation point to a rise in prices.

"In almost all markets the coal men could use more cars than they are getting. In a good many places the need has been for more gondola or flat bottom cars, but in certain districts the buyers have waived all specifications as to character of equipment and merely pleading for more cars of any kind. The mines are making use of everything that the railroads can give them, but even then are not able to ship coal up to the full demand of the trade. The peculiar part about it is that the shipment of coal to the lakes has been reduced considerably and some of the big producing companies have even completed their lake business for this year."

Magazine of Wall Street.

The Magazine of Wall Street for November contains an interesting article by H. Parker Willis, expert to Banking and Currency Committee, House of Representatives, on "Speculation and Investment Under the New Banking Bills." Willis reaches the conclusion that the law would raise call money rates in New York, but would not cause any general contraction of loans and that national banks would find it to their advantage to comply with the requirements. Other leading articles are: "Gold Production and Security Prices," by James H. Brookmire; "The Art of Interpreting Financial Conditions," by G. C. Selden; "Facts About Speculative Bonds," by Frederick Lownhaupt; "Low-Priced Stocks for the Small Investor"; "The Bethlehem Steel Corporation"; "Commodity Prices on Business Failures," "The Market Outlook."

Speculation in wheat dried up Saturday, but prices were easier. Cables were ¼d lower and the Argentine news negative.

There were some unfavorable reports from that country, however, and indications are that next week will see a reiteration of the past week's dispatches, when the Argentine crop was good one day and bad the next for six consecutive days.

Government investigation of the Chicago Board of Trade for many of its methods was shelved last spring until the coming December.

It seems that the present "raw" Argentine reports, largely manufactured by the La Salle street crowd, can only call attention more forcibly to the "bunco" game waged in the grain markets, by special interests, for the past three years, and hightens the chances of adverse legislation against future trading in grain and commodities.

Certain it is that the speculation in grain has been cut in half in the past two years, owing to the control of the trade by the Chicago interests.

And there is every reason to believe that the coming investigation of the practices of the Chicago Board will be more thorough and far-reaching than the New York Stock Exchange investigation of a year ago.

The official Liverpool cable said:

"The wheat market responded to the steady American cables and the firm feeling in Winnipeg and opening values were ⅛d to ¼d higher. Indications of lighter American shipments this week, as shown by Bradstreets, and a growing scarcity of foreign offers of soft varieties and a firmer sentiment among holders helped the advance. During the morning the weakness in corn and conttinued generally favorable weather and crop advices from Argentine led to week-end profit taking and prices declined ⅜d to ½d, with a recovery of ⅛d in May, in which there is good speculative support, owing to the bad outlook in India. At the close the market was easy and unchanged to ¼d lower than yesterday.

Corn opened quiet and unchanged to ⅛d lower. Later there was heavy general realizing and prices broke 1⅛d to 1½d on the heavy tenders on contract and the enormous stocks here. Spot market for Plate grade declined 1d and arrivals are expected to be heavy on Monday. During the morning there was some little recovery from the extreme low, with the market excited. At the close the undertone was weak and ¾d to 1⅛d lower than yesterday.

"Today is a holiday in Antwerp, Budapest and Paris, in observance of All Saints Day."

Liverpool wheat futures closed ¼d lower, corn 1⅛d lower. Berlin wheat ⅝c higher. Other markets closed.

The Oklahoma November report makes the corn yield 15½ bu per acre, against 12 in October. The yield last November was 19¼ bu, when the crop was 102,000,000 bu. Wheat acreage increased 30 per cent. Crop starts with excellent prospect; best in years.

Transportation Manager J. M. Hopkins announces that effective Dec. 1, the Illinois Central Railroad will apply the elevation allowance of ¼c per bu at Chicago, on all grain shipped to points in Mississippi Valley territory. This covers substantially the states of Tennessee, Mississippi and Louisiana, which includes such points as Memphis, New Orleans and Mobile.

Minneapolis wired: "Cash wheat premiums are unchanged. Demand good. No. 1 northern blue stem, 2¼c to 3c over December. No. 1 northern velvet chaff, 1c to 1¾c over December."

Local wheat receipts were 122,622 bu, or 632 sacks, 91 cars local, 10 through. Corn 39,600 bu, or 27 cars local, 6 through. Oats receipts 71,400 bu, or 31 cars local, 11 through. Last year holiday.

Total primary wheat receipts were 1,071,000 bu, shipments 564,000 bu; corn receipts were 372,000 bu, shipments 619,000 bu; oats receipts were 709,000 bu, shipments 661,000 bu; last year holiday.

Duluth wheat stocks increased 1,496,000 bu for the week. Total stocks 12,146,000 bu.

Total clearances: Wheat 321,000 bu, flour 59,000 bu, corn 11,000 bu; oats 22,000 bu. Wheat and flour 587,000.

Estimated wheat cars for Monday were 16, corn 73, oats 128.

COTTON MARKET LOWER AFTER STEADY OPENING

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—Relatively weak cables and reports that the South was offering cotton more freely in Liverpool, started a selling movement in the local cotton market this morning, and after opening steady at an advance of 2 to 6, prices soon eased off 10 to 11 net lower.

Spot cotton, quiet; middling uplands, 14.10c; gulf, 14.35c. No sales.

Buying by trade interests helped the rally to last night's closing figures, but the advance was checked by realizing and prices eased late in the morning on a private crop estimate of 14,680,000 bales minimum. The close was steady at a net loss of 4 to 6 points.

If

the Glass bill (new currency) becomes a national law it will enable banks to obtain an issue of bank notes on the security of discounts, acceptances and all forms of commodity credit. In this event, $1 of lawful money will equal $3 of credit. This method is proposed as a plan to release a vast amount of money now hoarded in vaults, and, therefore, will bring to brokers a large investment clientele heretofore unknown. While this currency bill is pending passage at Washington there is no better time for St. Louis brokers to advertise stock and bond bargains, and there is no better medium than the Post-Dispatch, the one newspaper in every home—the only newspaper in many homes.

In Memoriam.
Today, Nov. 1, 1913, makes five years since the passing away of our dear mother, Emelia Besmer. It has been five years of sadness with bowed heads and heavy hearts, not only the husband and children have mourned, all who knew her have missed her cheery smile and pleasant companionship. Only the thought that mother is being well cared for above makes life bearable. Her loving son. EDWARD BESMER JR.

TEMPEST IS EXPECTED OVER BUSCH EULOGY

Temperance Advocates Angry Because Address Dyer Was Put Into Congressional Record.

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—A dispatch to the Evening Post from Washington says:

"There is the making of a tempest in a teapot in the House. As the brief daily session was coming to an end Tuesday, Representative Dyer of Missouri, asked and obtained unanimous consent "to extend his remarks in the Record by printing a speech delivered by Charles Nagel, ex-Secretary of Commerce and Labor, of St. Louis." When Nagel's speech was printed in the Record it was found to be a eulogy delivered at the funeral of the late Adolphus Busch, the St. Louis brewer. This has aroused some of the temperance men in the House. They are asking whether the eulogy is to be preserved in the permanent House volumes of the Congressional Record.

"Under the leave to extend remarks so freely granted by the House, a great deal of curious and irrelevant matter has found a place in the Record, but an oration made by one private citizen at the funeral of another is declared to be unprecedented material for volumes which are supposed to be concerned solely with debates in Congress and public.

"There is opportunity for quite a bother if any of the Prohibition men in the House choose to try to expunge Nagel's flattering comment on the life and character of Busch."

MEXICANS FEAR FINANCIAL CRISIS

Huerta Has Trouble Meeting Pay Roll, Bank Funds Withdrawn, Bankers Apprehensive.

By Associated Press.

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 1.—The Government encountered some difficulty in meeting its payroll for the 10 days ending yesterday. In some departments only partial payment was made, with the promise that the balance would be forthcoming today. In other departments payment had to be entirely deferred. Later, however, the Government secured funds and began giving their money to the men in all departments. The paymaster had instructions to continue at work all through last night if necessary.

Rumors of the inability of the administration to meet its financial engagements spread over the city, together with a rumor that President Huerta purposed to levy a tax of 15 per cent on all bank deposits. Many persons withdrew their funds from banks. Apparently there is no basis for the report. The withdrawals did not reach the proportion of runs on the banks, but bankers appeared apprehensive that this might be the result should the excitement continue to grow.

There is a distinctly high tension of expectancy here and on all sides the belief is freely expressed, both by Mexicans and foreigners, that the administration is facing a financial crisis. It is said that the banks and business houses have been reluctant to pay for shares in the 3,000,000-peso loan to which they recently subscribed. Many persons are alleged to have subscribed to the loan under pressure.

One report that was quickly denied by both parties concerned was to the effect that an effort had been made by the authorities to coerce the banks of London and Mexico into the payment of a large sum, but that the effort was blocked by Sir Lionel Carden, the British Minister, who complained direct to President Huerta. Both Sir Lionel and Manager Mitchell of the bank said the report was groundless.

There are many rumors in circulation. In the clubs, on the streets and at all meeting places foreigners relate to one another with the latest embellishments the reports of the Government's financial difficulty and predict a calamity in the near future.

Many persons are taking advantage of the short holiday season to go to Vera Cruz in anticipation of unpleasant consequences as a result of the next meeting of the Cabinet in Washington.

MRS. LIND HIDES 2 MEXICANS ON SHIP, PREVENTS ARREST

Wife of President Wilson's Envoy Tells How She Gave Her Stateroom to Them.

By Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—Mrs. John Lind, wife of President Wilson's special envoy to Mexico, has arrived here on the steamer Morro Castle from Vera Cruz. On the same ship came two Mexican legislators, who owe their liberty, if not their lives, to her quick wit and generosity. To save the two Mexicans from arrest at Vera Cruz, she hid them in her stateroom and sat up all night on deck until the boat left port and officers of the Huerta Government had gone ashore.

A week ago the cables brought word that the Ward liner Morro Castle had been detained at Vera Cruz, while Huerta's agents searched for eight rebellious members of the Legislature of the State of Vera Cruz. Until the Morro Castle arrived here only those aboard knew that two of the eight "deputies" had escaped arrest. These two, Adolfo Domingues and Miguel A. Cordora, say they will stay in New York until Mexico becomes a safer home for the opponents of Huerta.

Mrs. Lind said that her husband had expected to come home after the Mexican election. Now she said she did not know when he would come.

Mrs. Lind's Story of Incident.

"We expected that the Morro Castle would sail from Vera Cruz," said Mrs. Lind, "at 4 o'clock on the afternoon of Oct. 23. Then Capt. Huff was subpenaed to testify regarding the flight of Dr. Francisco Vasques Gomez, who had sailed on the Morro Castle five months before. Later we learned that the real reason for our detention was that the Government wished to search the ship for eight State Legislators from the city of Jalapa. They arrested six of these men, but they did not find the others; and I'll tell you why.

"While the search was going on, the friends of these two men learned that I was aboard and they came with tears in their eyes begging me to help them. I said, 'Here's the key to my stateroom. Take it.'

"That was all they needed. I spent the night on deck and the two men hid in my room until the detectives gave up the search and went ashore. Then the ship was released and we sailed at 5 o'clock the next morning."

"They're After Me!"

The wife of the special envoy is a housewifely little woman with quiet manners and a low voice; but her eyes flashed as she asserted:

"I couldn't bear to think of those men being taken ashore and hanged. I just had to do something for them."

Two other Americans aboard the Morro Castle, George Hebron and John Kane, employes of the American Smelting and Refining Co., also had an experience with Domingues and Cordora. There were rumors that Huerta's agents stayed aboard until the ship reached Progreso on the afternoon of Oct. 25. The first night out of Vera Cruz, Hebron said that Domingues burst into their stateroom yelling in Spanish, "They're after me! They're after me!"

Hebron ran on the deck and into the arms of a squad of Mexican soldiers.

"Are you an American?" they demanded.

Hebron said he was, and they made no attempt to detain him.

"When I returned to my stateroom," said the American, "I found Domingues inside with the door barricaded."

HINT TO HUERTA BY PORFIRIO DIAZ

By Associated Press.

LONDON, Nov. 1.—"None should forget that Mexico is now a very great country and must be considered by all as such," said Gen. Porfirio Diaz today, when questioned in Paris about the situation. He said: "I am not going to discuss either the policy of the United States or the message President Wilson is going to read on Monday."

Gen. Diaz once more declared he had present intention of returning to Mexico. He said this in an interview with the Paris correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Co., adding:

"I will only return to my country in case a foreign nation attacks it, and you may rest assured that, in such an event, all Mexico will be solidly united in its efforts to throw out the invaders."

The former President of Mexico said that if Gen. Felix Diaz had followed his advice, he would not have attempted to land at Vera Cruz.

"When I was in power I had both men and money," he said. "Nobody can do without them. Now that Provisional President Huerta has both, he may find out sooner or later that the President of the Mexican Republic must always govern for and by his people."

The reference made by Gen. Porfirio Diaz to the reading of a "message" by President Wilson next Monday probably arises from a confusion in the dispatches issued in Europe on the coming announcement by the President of the newly planned policy of the United States in regard to Mexico.

The Jarr Family

By ROY L. McCARDELL

Mr. Jarr Finds He Can Be Popular for the Insignificant Sum of $5.

"POSITIVELY, my dear, you've become a 'Who's Who?'" said Mrs. Josephine Blessington Blotch, the noted clubwoman and militant suffragette. "Positively, you MUST come and sit with me on the dais!"

And she laid hands upon Mrs. Jarr to draw her to the rostrum at the meeting of the Feminist Movement for Universal Peace in the Hyacinth Room of the Hotel St. Croesus.

Miss Badger, who led the opposition clique in the club, gave Mrs. Jarr a significant glance and motioned her to come and sit by her in the second row of gilt chairs, where, with Miss Tucker, head of the Modern Mothers, and Mrs. Raddick of the Propaganda for Uncooked Food, all the votes of "Nay" for everything Mrs. Blotch proposed was always registered.

Mrs. Jarr, realizing she had a helpless husband with her and not desiring to tie up with either faction, as, now her social star was in the ascendent, she might have opportunity to be a neutral power at the next club election, shook her head gently but firmly at Miss Badger and at the same time graciously refused the exalted position Mrs. Blotch would have placed her in.

"Really, you know, my dear Mrs. Blotch, since I have returned from Panama and the West Indies"—began Mrs. Jarr.

"Yes, I know, my dear, and it is on it that you are to be to the Presidentess of Costa Rica what Helen, what-you-may-call-um—you know her hame. is a household word in every language—was to Carmen Sylvia, the authoress, Queen of Hungaria, or whatever it was, somewhere! Positively, my dear, you are a 'Who's Who!'"

A woman newspaper writer came forward at this juncture and asked Mrs. Jarr if she would be interviewed on "How the Presidentess of Costa Rica Makes Guava Jelly" for the "Household Hints Department" of a great Sunday paper.

"But you know I would not presume to discuss the private affairs of the Presidentess," replied Mrs. Jarr.

"What delicacy!" murmured several prominent club women whom nobody knew, but who edged toward the newspaper writer that they might give their names as among those present.

All business or quarreling, which was generally its business in the club meeting, had come to a standstill. But Mrs. Blessington Blotch stood smiling by the speaker's table with her dainty ivory gavel in her hand. She could not bring herself to knock wood with it and cry sharply, "Order, Please!"

It was out of the question to call Mrs. Jarr to order—one who had become a "Who's Who?"—owing to a delightful personal association with the Presidentess of Costa Rica!

Meanwhile, a very old young woman with a shrill voice had dragged Mr. Jarr from the protection of his wife and, pulling a notebook and a pencil upon him, had demanded that he set aside the following Saturday night to be the guest of honor at the famous Dingy Dining Club.

"I am the president of the Dingy Club," said the very old young woman, or very young old woman. "You will make the acquaintance there of the most wonderful people—Genius Unrecognized, Brains Unrewarded—the Guest of Honor gets his dinner for nothing. You can talk to us for 20 minutes on "How It Feels to Be an Impediment to One's Wife's Career." But do not speak longer than 20 minutes.

"Every member of the Dingy Club wears a wrist watch and when 20 minutes is up they all throw spaghetti with tomato sauce at the Guest of Honor if he is still boring them with his remarks.

"[It's] the most delightful club in New York, and the dinner is given at the dear old Fried Cat Restaurant, only 40 cents, with wine, and positively you can eat everything but the fish. Never touch the fish!"

"I won't!" said Mr. Jarr firmly.

By this time Mrs. Jarr had taken a seat. So, seeing it was only the president of the Dingy Club and a mere man disturbing the chances of a quarrel as soon as the meeting started, all present began to hiss and cry:

"Sit down!"

"They are jealous of my club!" cried the young old woman to Mr. Jarr. Bessie Pussfoot of the Oreide Club and Delia Danks, wife of Tommy Danks (who gets a 40 per cent rakeoff on what each guest pays for his meal at the Gloaming Club, and who charges his Guests of Honor $10 each), are here! Don't forget Saturday night—the Guest of Honor is expected to tip the head waiter $5. Good-by!"

And she was gone.

It was a good example. And Mr. Jarr followed it—and her.

"YOU know that cloth I was going to make a skirt of? Well, I dropped it out of the window."

"Oh, don't worry over such a trifle."

HIS KIND.

WHEN Thomas B. Crews was Judge of the Probate Court he was much annoyed by an old, "stalwart Democrat, who never scratched a ticket and always voted 'er straight, yaller dog and all," and who made persistent and frequent demands for a reward for his political service. Judge Crews had but few jobs to give away.

The old Democrat had called a dozen times or more to prosecute his demand, when Judge Crews said to him:

"My friend, I have no job to give you, but if you will tell me just what you want, perhaps I can help you find one somewhere else."

"Judge," said the old Democrat," I have not exactly made up my mind as to what I want, but I think it is one of them jobs you call a si-na-cu-ree!"

In the Public Eye.

AFTER all, the train was only 40 minutes behind time, so the station master was perfectly justified in feeling pleased with himself, the railway and the world in general.

A solitary, waiting passenger was morbidly weighing himself at an automatic machine, and when he stepped off it the jovial official proceeded to talk to him.

"Wonderful thing the railway system, sir!" he chirped. "I do really believe that even the general public is at last beginning to realize the marvellous improvements that have taken place on this line in recent years!"

"That's true," answered the morbid one. "I know of no line that has so many things constantly in the public eye as this one!"

The station master was delighted. "I am more than glad to hear you say so, sir!" he chuckled, rubbing his hands together. "And would you mind naming them?"

The waiting passanger looked pensively down the platform.

"Cinders!" said he.

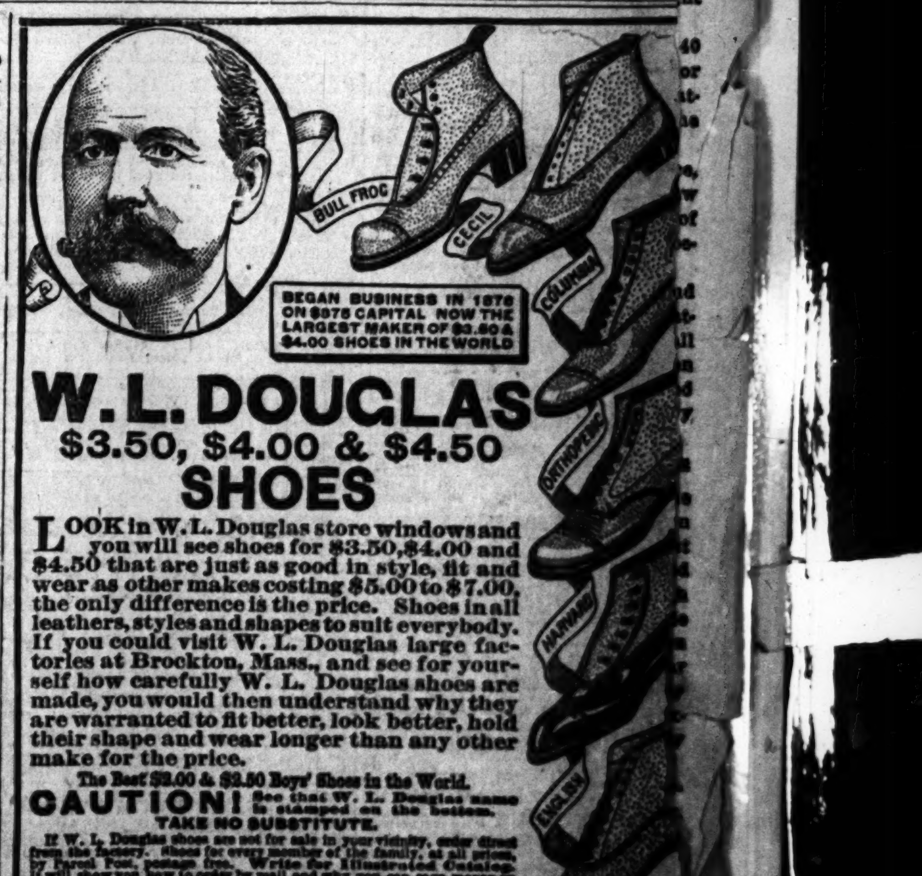

Lambasted.

A NEW trainer was engaged for the circus and was told to put a lion and a lamb through an act. He seemed nervous, and the next day his boss asked him how he got along with the savage lion.

"The lion didn't bother me much,' he said, "but that durned lamb butted the daylights out of me!"

"DO you love me enough to deny yourself anything for me?"

"Well, I've asked you to stop smoking and I'm saving coupons."
